Mr Parry, a senior member of the TUC General Council, said afterwards: "I am sorry but not surprised. I am as concerued as everyone else about public safety but you cannot go outside a decision taken by a majority of that size."

In a reference to reports that in the event of a strike Servicemen would be used to man fire stations. Mr Parry said he did not believe that the Armed Forces would be able to provide sedemate cover. Mr Parry was at pains to point out yesterday that the claim would advance the pay of firemen, who have a take-home pay of £46.71, in the case of a qualified married man with two children, to the level the police already enjoy if their free housing or rent allowances are taken into account. Most firemen have no subsidized housing.

He added that during yesterday's debate it had been suggested by some delegates that a number of members in a number of brigades might not obey strike instructions, but it was not for him to say whether hat was the case. ### Increase in fleas a ticklish issue

A ticklish question is causing English health authorities to scratch their heads. The fleas that tease are multiplying at an unusual rate, and are biting at the very fabric of society. In recent weeks there have been reports of 800 women at a Staffordshire factory getting the itch to walk out on strike: the operating theatre of a hospital at Hemel Hempstead, Hertfordshire, having to close twice in a week because of competition for the blood of both patients and doctors; and a Southampton hospital closing its physiotherapy department and a ward, besides having to disinfest all its ambulances. Rentokil, the country's largest hygiene in some areas.

More than three quarters of all fleas infesting buildings are car fleas, pest control authorities believe. They do not confine their activities to cats, and their ability to leap means they can easily transfer their attentions to another bost. Bird fleas can also enter houses from nests in the rafters. But the human flea, once common, has been almost eradicated.

Rat fleas were once carriers of bubonic plague and typhus but, in Eritain at least, the menace has been reduced to a mere irritant, for dogs, cats and

Militant firemen have Flixborough and Moorgate at the back of their minds

By Donald Macintyre Labour Reporter

The strike resolution passed by a two-to-one majority at the Fire Brigade's Union conference yesterday said: "This conference agrees to commence strike action as from the day shift on Monday, November 14, 1977, in support of a wage claim based on male average earnings plus 10 per cent.

"This action to be taken in the event of failure to settle this claim in the intervening period between November 7 and 13, 1977. The strike action will be terminated upon the payment of this claim or the decision of a recalled delegates conference."

The Post Office Corporation is asking the Government for £1.5m as reimbursement for continuing operation of the 999 emergency call telephone service to the police, fire and ambulance services.

Mr Ennals asks public to advise on how to combat drunkenness

By John Roper Health Services Correspondent Mr Ennals, Secretary of State or Social Services, yesterday invited the public to say what action the Government should take to combat increasing drunkenness.

Opening, in Newcastle upon Type, the Health Education Council's north-eastern campaign on alcoholism, he posed eight opuestions. Should eight opuestions. Should people be allowed to drink themselves to "death or disin-tegration" and damage those around them, with the Government not concerning itself with personal behaviour or having a duty to seek to contain a grow-

Should a bigger tax on alcohol be imposed or was that un-fair to sensible drinkers? Should tax policies to ensure that the price of drink re-mained constant in relation to income, as advocated last week by his advisory committee, be used or not?

Should the law on drinking and driving be made severer, perhaps by random brash tests, ncreased penalties and/or a lower limit of alcohol in the blood than the present 80 milli-grams a 100 millilitres, which now incurred conviction?

Call for new outlook on treatment of disabled

By Our Health Services Correspondent

Everyone concerned with the care of the disabled, particularly family doctors, should take a new view of the treatment and support of victims estimated to number over 1,500,000, the Office of Health Economics suggests in a report on physical impairment and social bandicap, published yesterday.

Many facilities for the disabled are based on rehabilita-tion of the wounded from the two world wars, and although Britain has done much since 1945 insufficient attention has been paid to the changing pattern of disability.

Today most physical limitation occurs among people aged 50 or over. The main causes are conditions such as arthritis,

Police inquiry is ordered after press allegations

From Our Correspondent

A police investigation has been ordered into corruption allegations said to be contained in a dossier compiled by a provincial newspaper. An independent inquiry, ordered by the Director of Public Prosecutions, follows investigations made over six months by the Lancashire Evening Post at Preston and is being headed by Det Chief Supt Roy Readwin, head of Nottinghamshire CID.

The 50-page dossier is said to contain evidence of alleged corruption in some areas of local government and business circles in Lancashire.

The Lancashire Evening Post described its contents as deeply disturbing and reported that the police investigation would cover the possible misuse of councilpowers, alleged false attendance claims and developments worth hundreds of thousands of pounds.

Warning to councils on heating

Local authorities should never use electric heating systems to cut costs of building new homes, according to advice issued by the Department of the Environment today.

standards, strong ties with the Commonwealth and hence a different view of Europe. According to Mr Budd, part of the difficulty lies in the way gewspapermen work and the Council of Ministers operates.

The ministers make prepared statements of view that, baldly reported, led to headlines that include "veto", "deadlock", "ban", "walkout", "defeat" or "victory". There was little There was little about the compromises, condi-tional agreements or settlements that followed the initial state-ments in the bours after news-papers and television have "gone to bed". It is not surprising that the commission has failed to win the argument when the argument is so often inaccurately presented". Mr Budd

There were three reasons. Emotive words stuck in the memory. Some of the reports emerging from Brussels presented the first sketch draft of an idea, which in Westminster would be stamped "confidential" and locked away, as hard policy. Then there was the real failure of the Council of Ministers to agree on policies that would mean something positive to housewives or working to bousewives or working people.

There were some simple variosticks to measure the benefits of membership. For every 40p Scotland paid into what might be called the Euro kitty, the country received £1. Sadly, the decision to strengthen

European links coincided with rocketing inflation and fond prices and a severe industrial recession. The blame for much of that had landed unfairly on the shoulders of the EEC, which in turn has been prevented from using Community resources to achieve a series of more ambitious policies that would have given a better reflection of European unity.

The biggest and most misconstrued reason for disliking the Community had been the alleged impact on food prices, although the increase directly attributable to British membership was 1p in the pound, a fraction of the rise caused by inflation.

One recent food price rise forecast in headlines dripping with gloom stated that "£2.28 a with gloom stated that "£2.28 a week will be added to the food bill of the average family". What actually emerged was an increase of a third of a penny in the pound.

Assassination by headline writers, Mr Budd observed, was not unusual. Two lively Scottish issues.

North Sea oil and North Sca fishing rights, are often quoted at the commission as examples of how EFC countries wish to lay what might be called Eurolay what might be called Euro-hands on British resources. Patiently the pro-Europeans point out that British oil is a British resource and, provided EEC partners are not discrimi-nated against pricing, extrac-tion rates and taxation policy are entirely for the British Government.

High level of foreign car sales can best be counteracted by UK companies producing more

More cars had to be produced in the United Kingdom economy and ers had to be offered more reli-able supplies Mr Edmund Dell, Supplies for Edmingd Dell, Secretary of State for Trade, said when answering questions about the level of penetration of the United Kingdom market by Jap-anese car manufacturers. He said he was disturbed at the level of Mr Tom Litterick (Birmingham, Selly Oak, Lab)—in the first six months of this year no less than 75,000 units were imported into Britain from Japan, while no more than 416 units were exported from Britain to Japan. At the current rate, this represents a total importation of 150,000 units a year and the loss of 10,000 to 15,000 jobs in the British economy.

Will he give some indication that the days of pussy footing with the Japanese are over? Will he attempt to do something to deal with the marketing practices of multinational companies who refuse to allow British subsidiaries or export to Japane ?

Mr Dell (Birkenhead, Lab)—There is an understanding between the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders and the Japanese automobile association, renewed in September, that the level of marker penetration this year will not be significantly different from that of last year.

On present figures, this is going to be difficult to achieve and I have impressed upon the Japanese Ambassador the dangers to which this gives rise.

Exports to

must grow

British exports to Japan had grown 35 per cent in sterling terms and 24 per cent in sterling terms in the first nine months of this year, Mr Edmund Dell, Secretary of State for Trade, said. This was a creditable achievement, but Britain should be able to do much better. He was in touch with the Japanese about means of encouraging further imports from the United Kingdom.

Mr Roderick MacFarquhar (Belper, Lab)—While welcoming that news, there is not only a purely Japanese barrier to our exports but the British self-imposed barrier of relative ignorance of the Japanese market.
Would he urge British companies seeking seriously to penetrate that market to train at least some exertives in a study of Japan and its utives in a study of Japan and its language in the way the Japanese have studied our language and cul-ture with successful results ?

Mr Bell—Certainly, but this rel-ative ignorance has been substan-tially reduced in recess years by the attempts which major and smaller British firms have made to penetrate the Japanese market.

Mr Dell—There are a number of cases already in which voluntary restraint arrangements are in existence. My own belief is that in world trade generally it will be necessary to have such arrangements to reduce the effect that aggressive export drives can other-wise have, taking account of present levels of unemployment.

What steps is he going to take to overcome the lethargy barrier which seems to affect British in-dustry in exporting British cars to Mr Dell—I am aware of these figures. British andustry has attempted to develop exports to Japan, but one of the problems which exists—and I have drawn attention to it in discussions with the Japanese Government—is the barriers that are making it difficult for British and other European explorers to penetrate the Japanese marker.

Mr Dell—The position has to be seen against the background of the overall Japanese surplus with this country and the world. I believe that a surplus of the A. I believe that a surplus of that dimension, which contrary to forecasts has been increasing, is in the long run unacceptable if the world's rading system is to be continued. That is why so much concern has to be expressed on Japanese exports, parti-cularly motor cars. Nevertheless, it is certainly true that the exposition of imports in

Mr. Robert Adley (Christchurch and Lymington, C) had asked if the minister was satisfied that the Government were now fully in possession of the United Kingdom's treaty rights concerning Concorde landing rights in the United States.

Mr John Pardoe (North Cornwall, L)—Is it not a fact that the Government have simply used perfectly legal sanctions to support their pay policy? (Conservative laughter.) Anyone in this House who cares to see the rate of inflation brought down will support the Government in using whatever sanctions they have available.

Would Mr Dell confirm that any firm able to afford to pay its employees more than 10 per cent does not need my money or that of the British taxpayers to ball out its British exports. Mr Dell,—He is right in saying that it was a perfectly proper use of the legal powers which the Secretary of State has under Section 2 of the Export Guarantees Act. Mir Dennis Skinner (Bolsover, Lab)—Why does Mr Dell stand by the criteria, as seemingly he does, that it is right to bully firms into that it is right to belly farms into trying not to pay wage increases of a minor kind similar to those in Northern Ireland while at the same time they refuse to bully firms who are putting up prices by 15 to 18 per cent—even now—and refuse to take any action against the chairman of Wadgwood who has increased his shiary from £75,000 in 1975 to £113,000 this year, at a time when the rest of the workforce has been under an incomes policy? Why does he not tackle it in that fashion? it in that fashion?

Mr Dell—It is perfectly right for the Government to use all the powers they have to secure the success of the 10 per cent pay guidelines. If they do not achieve that success then the rate of inflation, instead of going down, will go up and that would be contrary to the interests of this country. Mr Nort—If the Secretary of State to the interests of this country.

Mr Nott—If the Secretary of State wishes to publish legislation to control their pay norm then that is something for the House of Commons, but export credit was never intended to be used as a seaction. If the Government wish to have sanctions why do they not come to the House of Commons for them in the proper way instead of abusing their authority and discretion in this way?

Mr Dell—There is no question of Mr Dell—There is no question of an abuse of authority. (Conserva-tive protests.) Section 2 of the Act tive protests.) Section 2 of the Act permits the Secretary of State for Trade to make a judgment on the national interest. It seems to me clear that a judgment of the national interest includes the inflationary effects of certain settlements and it is in consideration of that, among other aspects of this matter, that led me to the conclusion I came to.

They continued to At the end of September 1967, the number of police officers in England and Wales was 108,700, while three years ago their strength was 100,300. He had told the federation on October 27 that the Government were willing to accept the conclusions of the inquiry on pay. Although the detailed terms of reference had yet to be fixed, the inquiry would consider levels of remuneration appropriate for the police in the light of such acts as developments in the responsibility and work loads, the stresses and dangers to which the police were exposed, the need to ensure adequate police strength and the restrictions to which the police were subject.

Did the Home Secretary repudiate that statement? (Conservative cheers.) Would the Home Secretary tell Mr Flammery that attempts to undermine public confidence in the police could only be designed to undermine law and order. It was time that stopped. (Renewed Conservative cheers.) Mr Rees said the police had his full confidence and the confidence of the Government. He stack to that. He would repudiate anybody who dealed that. He had no sympathy for an employer who had repeatedly refused to shide by the normal process of arbitration and conciliation, or for those who latched on to this dispute as an excuse for provoking violence, and particularly violence against the police.

Mr James Marshall (Leicester, South, Lab) said he was at Granwick in a non-violent capacity. He was appalled this morning, as a person who held the police in high regard, by the degree of violence they exhibited in many pickets, those non-violent and perhaps those violent, and at the wanton destruction of banners which were ripped and smashed. They were not being used as weapons. (Conservative interruptions.)

dure for anybody who had any complaint against the police there was a proper procedure, not through the Home Secretary but direct to the commissioner. He thought it was a good idea, and he recommended it to Mr Marshall. The historic evidence of the use of powers under the Public Order Act, 1936, was that in practice it was extremely difficult to stop at a ban on a particular march by a particular organization. In the past, pressures had led to the banning of all marches over a widening area and period of time, catching up all sorts of respectable organizations.

It might well be that the Public Order Act was in need of revision. The Government had been considering a number of points during the recess, including the giving of advance notice of processions, which had long been the practice in Northern Ireland, and that there should be greater powers to ban particular marches.

There had been suggestions that

There had been suggestions that the Home Secretary should have powers to ban marches on his own evaluation, and should have to make a political decision.

If I was making a political decision the said of the sa sion (he said) I would need no advice but would be taking it on my own subjective views. These views by the Home Secretary are not necessarily the best. Mr Frank Allann (Salford, East, Lab)—Is it not essential that in this consideration he distinguishes between politics and racialism?

Mr Rees—All past experience shows that if one comes to the point of proscribing an argarization it is very easy for it to change name. It is not easy to ben the new organization if it mentions nothing of racialism, but, for instance, concentrates on the EEC or some other aspect of policy.

The Attorney General, he went on, had new powers under the Race Relations Act, and the effectiveness of these would be studied. As for race relations, he had been picketed by the National Front on Saturday and looking at the sort of people involved he felt they had to state the positive case for a multi-racial society. for a multi-racial society. This is much more difficult to do (he said) than fighting a street battle. Such battles will not resolve this problem. It will make it a great deal worse. The morale of the police was a worrying problem but it would not be dealt with merely by pay crouting the blame on one political party or another. It was something they should all put their minds to. they should all put their minds to.

The fire service was a part of law and order. The Government had set out their position last week after he had met the National Joint Council. It was explained that any settlement for firemen would have to be within the pay guidelines.

The Government recognized the long standing claim for a reduction in the 48-hour week. They would be prepared for a reduction of working hours to be negotiated. It would not be practicable to implement a reduction before the autumn of 1978 because of the need to train new firemen although preparation could begin before

The Government also recognized the need for establishing a formula for determing fire service pay. They welcomed the fact that the They welcomed the fact that the NJC was seeking to do this through NJC was seeking to do this inrouch established negotiating procedures.

Carrillo party gives the lie to Tass report

Prom William Chiclest Madrid, Nov. 7

The Spanish Communist Party today rejected a state-ment from Tass about the failure of Senor Carrillo, the party's leader, to speak at the kreming during the sixtieth anniversary of the October Revolution. Tass said it was because he arrived late, but the party maintained that he was invited to speak and then

The Tass version, based on an interview with Mr Victor Afasiev, the editor of Pravda. was yet another sign of the rift Moscow and the Eurocommunist " party. The Soviet news agency's statement was tanta-mount to calling Secor Carrillo a Har.

In its reply, the Spanish party limited itself to listing chronologically what happened. It said that Senor Carrillo and other members had originally told Moscow they would be able to go only for the end of the celebrations because of other commitments.

However, after a delegation from Moscow arrived, including the Pravda editor to tell the Spanish party that Señor arrillo vas invited to speak that his presence was requested from the beginning the party changed its timetable and agreed.

Señor Carrillo was then invited to prepare a speech lasting between "five and seven" minutes—and he handed it in to be translated on arrival in Moscow. The party had by then Moscow. The party had by then told Moscow that he would arrive late as he had to attend the congress of the Catalan Communist Party. The statement added that the Spanish knew the speech was translated but that Señor Carrillo was not called to speak.

It added that the offer made to Senor Carrillo to speak at another meeting or outside Moscow was "inconsiderate". Senor Enrique Lister, Senor Carrillo's rival as secretary general of the Spanish Workers' Communist Party returned to Madrid this evening after 38 years in exile.

Italian gang kidnap duke for £6m ransom

Rome, Nov 7.—A gang of armed masked men kidnapped a wealthy Italian pobleman, Duke Massimiliano Grazioli, as he was touring his estates on the outskirts of Rome today, police said.

A few hours later his family reported receiving a relephoned demand for a 10,000m lire (about £6.2m) ransom if the duke was not to be killed. The duke, aged 66, was driving to his offices in a castle on the estate when a car blocked his path. Three men carrying pistols jumped out. Two of them forced their way into his car and drove off with him.

The duke devoted most of his time to running his lands north of Rome, where he raised horses. He lived in the family palace a few blocks from Piazza Venezia, i nthe heart of Rome. Poor relation among the armed services is finding it increasingly difficult to meet all its commitments

France's navy fights to stay afloat

From Ian Murray Paris, Nov 7

Twenty-one guns thundered out in salute across the wide bay of Brest this morning as President Giscard d'Estaing chimbed on board the helicopter carrier Jeanne d'Arc after a review of the Atlantic squadron anchored there. As the crews roared out "Vive la République" seven times and the tricolours and pennants streamed in the breeze, it should have been a proud moment for Frence.

Behind all the show and Behind all the show and pomp, however, lay the unpleasant truth that the French Navy is the poor relation of the armed services. It was because the Defence Ministry budget is in danger of being turned down when it is debated on Wednesday that brought the President to Brest.

The national assembly's defence committee has already rejected the budget estimate and has told M Bourges, the Defence Minister, that it is above all concerned by the decision to cancel the building of a sixth nuclear submarine to increase France's deterrent increase France's deterrent

However strong the nuclear submarine force is, nothing can disguise the fact that France's conventional surface fleet is aging rapidly and becoming increasingly unable to be relief on to meet its commitments. It was built largely during the early 1950s, with generous american help. For every 30,000 tons built, the United States aid paid for 20,000 tons.

The fleet, however, is now nearing the end of its 30 year life expectancy and has to be replaced quickly if France is not to run the risk of being equipped with an obsolete navy the 1980s. This means that 12,000 tons of warship should by the 1980s. This means that 12,000 tons of warship should be built each year from now on to bring the fleet up to the levels laid down in the "blue plan", put forward in 1972. The plan would have given France a fleet of 155 ships with a total displacement of 278,000 tons.

The "blue plan" has, to all intents and purposes, been intents and purposes, been abandoned and the present building programme will give France a fleet of 84 ships, with France a fleet of 84 ships, with a total displacement of 183,000 tons, by 1987, or 47 fewer ships than are serving at the moment.

A building level of this kind can scarcely be what President Giscard d'Estaing had in mind in February when he said at Quimper: "I hope that my presidency will be linked to the idea of French maritime expansion. The decade 1975-1985 must sion. The decade 1975-1985 must be that of France's maritime calling, for our nation is called to be the great maritime power of Western Europe."

It was to study these prob-lems with all the senior admirals of the French Navy that the President went to Brest today. As they met in the town ball, 8,000 shipyard workers, who were on a day's strike which was supported by the town council, demonstrated in the streets outside. M François Leble, the Socialist mayor, greeted the President in the town hall court-yard, then went out to join the demonstrators.

demonstrators.

For them the rundown in the fleet means a rundown in the number of jobs in the area. Brittany is already one of the areas in France with the highest memployment figures so rebuilding the fleet takes on a significance, with the election Iooming, beyond defence itself. The Jeanne d'Arc sailed from Brest today on a six-month

Life sentence demand in war crimes trial

From Our Correspondent Amsterdam, Nov 7

The public prosecutor has demanded a life sentence for Pieter Nicolas Menten, the Dutch millionaire art collector, aged 78, who is on trial here charged with war crimes in Poland.

He said he had refrained from asking the death penalty be-cause of the defendant's age and the lapse of time since the crimes were committed. Theo-retically, the death penalty is still applicable in the Nether-lands for war crimes.

From Our Own Correspondent Brussels, Nov 7

EEC agriculture ministers agreed here tonight to cut the duty on imported apples from 14 per cent to 6 per cent in an effort to increase supplies and hold down shop prices. This year's apple crop was about 20 per cent below the average in most EEC states.

The duty reduction is expected to attract an extra 30,000 to 50,000 tonnes of apples from North America and eastern Europe where the crop has

M Barre faces war of the croissant

From Charles Hargrove Paris, Nov 7 The bakers and confectioners

of France are about to declare the "war of the croissant" against the Government. They refuse to accept the new maximum prices imposed last week by M Barre, the Prime Minister, of the old one, and has even-of 1 franc (about 11p) for the at least mine had lost its ordinary croissan, 1.20 francs for the croissant made with burrer, and 1.30 francs for the chocolate roll. The prices came into force today.

The price for croissant made without butter was hitherto 1.20 francs and with butter, 1.60 francs or 1.70 francs. Some cafes even sold them for more than two francs plus 15 per cent

The Prime Minister's decision was amply justified. In the past year the price of cakes and confectioners has risen by 14 per cent, and their size has progressively shrunk, so that the traditional eclairs or choux a la crême are now hardly bigger than petits fours—a large mouthful. It is no different with the famous croissant, the Frenchman's breakfast staple.

As a reward for warning the garrison he was given the sole right to bake the commemora-tive buns that, after moving west, have become the Frenchmen's natural accompaniment of the marprinal cafe-creme.

The new maximum prices that come into force today raise howls not only from the bakers. The small shopkeepers and res taurant owners are also up in arms. A bottle of beaujolais less than three years old can not be sold for more than 21.90 francs, a cold sandwich for more than 3.50 francs, and a "hot" one for more than 4.50 francs, excluding service.

'End arms race' call by neutral nations

Belgrade, Nov 7.—Nine urgency it felt for the need to neutral countries at the Euro- progress both in arms limitspean Security Conference today called for urgent and immediate steps to halt the arms race and give new imperus to the stalled East-West disarmament talks.

The proposal put forward at the 35-nation conference by Mr Esko Rajakoski, the Finnish delegate on behalf of the nine neutral nations, said that political and military détente in Europe went hand-in-hand.

"It is of the utmost importance and urgency for all par-ticipating states, each of them in accordance with the place and role they have in this process, to take effective steps to-wards halting the arms race and waits nating the arms race and to intensify ongoing efforts in negotiating forums related to arms limitation and disarmament", the draft said.

Immediate steps to achieve these aims should also be taken on a regional basis, especially n Europe where military poten-ial was concentrated, it

The nine countries told the conference, which is reviewing progress since the 1975 Helsinki accords, that they were worried bout the lack of progress in lessening the danger of an East-West military confrontation and said the arms race was continuing. The neutrals called on the conference countries to encourage world-wide disarmament measures and to give their full support to next year's special General Assembly session on disarmament and to ensure the continuity of any steps.

They said the conference

They said the conference should make known the sense of progress both in arms limita-tion and disarmament.

Neutral diplomate said they were not suggesting that the Belgrade conference, which is stready complicated enough in its discussions of such emotive issues such as the Soviet block's record on human rights, should get horsed down in such as the get bogged down in arms takes.

"Our aim is to express our frustration that no effective steps have been taken to curb the arms race. But we do think that at a European security conference, disarmament should be discussed. He said neutral countries were disappointed about the slow progress, or stalemate, at pro-tracted East-West discussions in Vienna on mutual and balanced troop reductions in cantral Europe and the strategic arms limitation talks in Vienna. Our fear is that technological developments are moving too fast for the political and diplomatic means of coping with it", the dinlomat added.

The nine neutral and nonaligned countries who tabled the draft were: Austria, Cyprus, Finland, Liechtenstein, Majta, San Marino, Sweden, Switzer land and Yugoslavia. Neutral and Western countries have already proposed detailed measures to promote East-West military detente, with calls for the early notification of much smaller manoeuvres than at present and the prior notifica-

Indians asked to observe 'two children only' limit

From Richard Wigg

India is supping up its cam-paign to resume effective birth control programmes among the cural and urban masses. The voluntary campaign suffered a severe setback from the compulsory sterilization coforced during Mrs Gandhi's emergency. Now even the most unconventional methods must be tried, Mr Raj Narain, the Health Minister, rold a meet-ing of doctors and family plan-ning officials here.

Amid laughter, Mr Narain suggested that popular image 5,700 people came forward for nation might be fired in the voluntary sterilization in the remote villages, where birth control is badly needed, if all cows, sacred to Hindus, were branded with the slogan "Two

Corruption and violence in Arizona racing

Whispered clues lead to the conviction of reporter's killers

New York, Nov 7

Two men were found guilty in Phoenix yesterday of the first degree murder of Mr Don Bolles, an investigative reporter for the Arizona Republic.

Mir Bolies, who had been writing articles about bules between organized orime and horse and dog racing in Arizona, was family injured in June lass year when a bomb exploded in his car as he was reversing from a house parking space. He lost both arms and a log and died 11 dwe letter. leg and died 11 days later.

Before he died, Mr Bolles whispered the words "Adamson", "Emprise" and "Maile". The first of these clues led the police to John Ademson, a dog breeder, who confessed to a role in the kill-ing in exchange for a light sentence. He received a sentence of 20 years' imprisonment. years' imprisonmen while the two men convicted yesterday, James Robison, a plumber, and Max Dunlap, a contractor, could be sentenced to die in the gas chamber. The trial lasted nearly four months. Mr Adamson said that it was he who had planted the bomb detonated it with a radio trans-mitter, and both of them had acted under instructions from Mr Duniap, who offered him $50,000 (£28,000) for the death of Mr Bolies and two other men, including the State Amorney-General, who were not in the event, littled

Mr Ademson said Mr Dunlap told him that he was organizing the death of Mr Bolles on behalf of Mr Kemper Marley, a millionaire wine and spirit wholesaler. Mr Marley had wanted to be nominated to the Arizona Racing Commission, but articles by Mr Bolles casting doubt on his integrity and record had hindered this ambi-

Mr Marley gave evidence at the trial and denied any role in the killing. He has not been charged.

The word "Emprise" uttered by the reporter on his deathbed refers to the Emprise Corporation, a sports conglomerate whose subsidiary, Rauncorp, owns all six dog racing tracks in Arizona. Mr Bolles had written articles suggesting that Emprise had connexious with

The reporter's death aroused fury among American journalists. To honour his memory, a group of reporters from outside Arizona continued the investi-gations he had begun and wrote a series of articles about corruption in the state.

Evidence at the trial revealed an astonishing depth of corrup-tion, accompanied by ruthless violence. The lawyer for Mr Duolan alleged that his client had been framed by Mr Neal Roberts, a Phoenix lawyer, who is soon to stand trial with Mr Robison in connexion with a bomb attack on a federal build ing last year.

Mr William Schafer, Assistant Attorney-General for Arizona. indicated yesterday that investigations were continuing in an to implicate more people in the conspiracy to kill Mr Bolles. "We don't have all the conspirators, but we will", he asserted.

Detective Jon Fellers of the

It was in 1975 that the Harkness Ballet of New York went out of business, leaving its Caraqueño ballet master, Vicente Nebrada, free for other work. Not long before, Zhandra Rodriguez, also from Caracas, having worked her way to the highest rank in American Ballet Theatre, found her scope limited by the company's emphasis on guest stars and decided to pursue her career elsewhere. releasewhere.

The theatre, with a capacity slightly less than Sadler's Wells, is elegant, but its horseshoe shaped auditorium makes for less than ideal sightlines from many seats, which explains the local habit of moving into any better seats seen unoccupied. Returning at the last minute after intervals is not recommended in this is not recommended in this house.

Only two years after its initial season the company is beginning to establish itself with the Caracas audience and to win new converts to ballet by performances, sometimes in vast open-air settings, in other Venezuelan cities. But as its name implies, Baller Interna-cional de Caracas has its sights set on a wider reputation. By far its strongest card at present is the possession of a real star dancer in Zhandra Rodriguez Some readers may remember her promise in small roles during Ballet Theatre's Covent Garden season in 1970. Since then I have had occasion to praise her in two roles John Neumeier created for her as guest in Hamburg, the child-angel in his Mahler Third

Her two most spectacular roles in the present Caracas repertory are by Balanchine, in Allegro brillante and the Tchaikovsky pas de deux. The speed and lightness of her dancing in the latter are joyously dazzling, and when a conductor unfamiliar with the piece introduced an unexpectedly slow tempo for one of her tedly slow tempo for one of her entries she proved capable of a luxuriantly controlled adagio style too. But although she excels the rest of the dancers, she by no means puts them out of countenance. I have seen far less good performances of Allegro brillante, with its difficult ensemble work, from better-known companies; the mixture of precision and individuality was nicely judged. Another moderately familiar work Alvin Ailey's The River, shows the company in even stronger form. Indeed, I thought that the enthusiasm with which they attacked it made the ballet more enjoyable than in Teresa Carreño's music and American Ballet Theatre's production. a duet made by Neumeier for Rodriguez and Zane Wilson. I wish he had found less familiar and more plausibly relevant music than the Mozart thems popularized by the film Elvira Madigas. But the dance itself is fascinating equally for its sinuous physical demands and for its emotional implications of Ariel's resemblance in some re-Ariel's resemblance in some respects to Caliban.

I also much enjoyed two ballets by Margo Sappington, who is best known in Britain as the choreographer of Oh, Calcutta! The idea of bringing statues to life is an old one in ballet, but her treament of it. statues to life is an old one in ballet, but her treatment of it in Rodin mis en vie is grippingly unbackneyed. Each dance uses the static appearance of the sculpture only as a starting point and tries to achieve a similar emotional quality through movement. Beginning with a series of

Beginning with a series of solos, it takes fresh breath with a central group of duets, outstanding among which are "The Eternal Idol" and "The Kiss", both with Rodriguez, partnered respectively by Dale Talley and Manuel Molina. The work reaches a powerful climax with "The Burghers of Calais" and "At the Gates of Hell", both full of tormented movement.

Quite different is Weerois. The title, we are told, is a private word invented by Miss Sappington and her husband. The ballet, to rock music by Stanley Walden, shows three different kinds of close relationship with overlane which compared to the control of th ship, with overlaps which seem to suggest that all three can co-exist in one couple. The friendly, teasing horseplay of Dale Talley and Zane Wilson is based on pure comradeship with no sexual connotations. Marielena Mencia and Alexander Filipov embody an entirely sensual connexion, closely entwined and entirely absorbed in each other. For Gina Bugati and Manuel Molina there is a more complex lovehate relationship, unable either to remain happily together or to stay apart. The implications give resonance to a work that on the surface is light and easy. and the dancers perform it with absolute assurance.

Nobody would pretend that the Ballet de Caracas is one of the world's great companies. its 22 dancers, about half of them Venezuelan, are skilled, likable and confident, its repertory varied and interesting. They benefit, too, from the aura that surrounds any worthwhile venture that knows itself to be developing rapidly. There is a possibility that the tour they also for next year tour they plan for next year may bring them to London: I for one would be pleased to see them again.

Never in the history of the Warsaw Chopin contest has the first prize gone to anyone younger than the Polish pianist, Krystian Zimerman. That was in 1975, when he was 18. On Sunday, still not quite 21, he gave his first London recital, filling every sear in the hall and winning all hearts.

Sonatas by Beethoven, Brahms and Chopin made up the programme. Not surpris-ingly it was his compatriot's No 3 in B minor which showed him at his finest. The performance has its technical marvels, not least the streaming quavers and semiquavers of the Scherzo and Finale. Yet it was the un-affected poise, the naturalness, indeed the inevitability of the interpretation that impressed movement, the trio of Scherzo and throughout the whole of the Largo (exquisitely timed and shaded) Mr Zimerman could have been Chopin himself, playing in his room to close personal friends. To the Finale he brought splendid cumulative strength and excitement—what matter if he slightly went through his tone at the last return of the big nine. In Beethoven's Pathétique Mr Zimerman combined romantic impulse with classical discipline: its drama and intensity were caught in crisp rhythm and crystalline texture, but surely the minims of the answering descent of the opening allegro theme were too detached to carry their weight. The young Brahms's Lisztian

Many artists have to grow abandon in the flanking moveold to find this kind of simplicity. Melody was intimately controlled Andante and Scherzo. Movements from a Bacewicz sonata were not the wisest encores but they reaffirmed his keyboard wizardry. In sum, a young artist who makes com-petitions worthwhile.

Monday marked the centenary of Belfour Gardiner's birth. On the eve of it the Monteverdi Choir and Orchestra gave a concert of music by Gardiner and his friends, notably those of the "Frankfurt Gang" (he and fellow-students of Iwan Knorr), but also Delius. Holst, and Bax. Many others might have been included, for Gardiner was a gregarious man and a generous friend to colleagues.

His patronage was as famous as his modesty about his compositions, many of which he withdrew or kept unperformed in a drawer. It was a virtue of this concert to show the strength of Batfour Gardiner's music in the context of such spleudid contemporary pieces as Delius's Summer Night on the River, Holst's "I love my love", and Grainger's "Shallow Brown" (this last performed,

Gardiner's cantata News from Whydah and "Evening Hymn" may still be familiar to choirs, us they deserve. The latter's organ part had been scored for orchestra expressly, and much it enhanced that stirring anthem. A "Movement for Strings" (from the withdrawn C minor string quintet) inspired respect and indicated the foreign sources of his idiom, but it was the Berkshire Idyll for orchestra which revealed the magician and poet in Gardiner most completely, a ravishing

Gordon Giltrap's music is claimed to inject a classical flavour into a rock idiom. The harmonies and structure owe as much to the seventeenth cen-tury as to the blues and much of the music makes play with the traditional baroque device of sounding two or more inde-pendent tunes and rhythms conturrently. Nevertheless its heart and soul is unashamedly of the mainstream of this century's popular music and it is in that fusion that the music's main interest lies.

from last year's Blake-inspired album "Visionary". By rock standards his playing is remark-able and his exploitation of the instrument is most refreshing. Harmonics were picked out to great effect in several numbers and the clarity of much of the intricate passage work was well controlled. Occasionally, his technique let him down, but I prefer to remember the moments of originality like the ending of "Catwalk Blues", with a beautiful slide into the major key for its final chord. The second part was virtually a complete performance of the new album "Perilous Jour-ney". As on the record the keyboards were more to the fore, so producing a greater richness of texture. # Incentive for players in period of restoration

England's filrtation with the use of large club units in the international team ended yesterday when the manager, Ron Greenwood, omitted Callaghan and Greenwood, omitted Callaghan and McDermott of Liverpool from the party of 22 players from which he will choose the team to play flaly in a World Cup qualifying match at Wembley tomorrow week. Liverpool still have four in the group but the team will not continue to emulate the style of the European Cup holders.

The match has become much less important than had been expected earlier in the competition but it remains significant as a guide to the future both at managerial and team levels. A modest victory for England, however unlikely even that may be, would do no more than force cver unlikely even that may be, would do no more than force Italy to best Luxembourg by any score in the last game on home ground on December 3. There is no doubt that Italy will do what is necessary against a team who have conceded 19 goals in five games. So, the primary point of next week's exercise is to avoid another embarrassing night at Wembley and perhaps offer one or two younger players some incentive.

two younger players some incentive.

The difficulty for Mr Greenwood is that England will also be playing for his personal future within the international framework. At least the result could have a bearing on the title he receives. By all accounts, the trend of thought at the Football Association is towards a managerial group with a fairly youthful team manager and Mr Greenwood directing the restoration of the game at all levels.

In theory the result of the the game at all levels.

In theory the result of the match should not watter a jot to the FA committee because Mr Greenwood's value is accepted. He has the experience, knowledge Greenwood's value is accepted. He has the experience, knowledge and ability to rebuild standards from the base.

After so many English disappointments at Wembley, Mr Greenwood will not risk sending out too many inexperienced youngsters against the Italians who have been so impressive in recent games. He has not called on Ward, the Brighton forward who was taken to Luxembourg with England for experience, Cunningtam, of West Bromwich Albion, or Woodcock, of Nottingham Forest, all of whom may be brought in during the new year. For the moment the new names to sentor international football are, Coppell and Barnes of Manchester United and Manchester City, respectively, Latchford, the burly Everton centre forward, and, the one surprise, 31-year-old Bonds, West Ham United's sturdy captain who played for the England under-23 ream as long ago as 1869.

The choice of Bonds rather than Calleghan in midfield or in his club role as a sweeper would be the replacement of industry with industry and tenacity combined, but there is the elternative of using him with Watson in the centre of defence. He has often saved West Ham from themselves with his practical approach and excellent tackling at the heart of a team often delightful to watch but too easily beaten.

Mr Greenwood clearly feets susceptible to criticism for suggesting a player who probably has many equals who would not be considered and comes from his former club, West Ham, Also, Boads has played only four first team matches this season because injury stopped him from appearing until the middle of last mouth. Even so, he could be of temporary teen so, he could be of temporary value to England by closely marking one of the Italian forwards, possibly Bettega, with Gidman's speed also useful in retaining players who accelerate dangerously.

Mr Greenwood said Bonds had not been chosen without recommendations from others apart from John Lyall, the West Ham manager, and with Beattle, Todd and Brian Greenhoff unavailable ha felt the choice was sound. He thought Bonds was versatle and could be compared with Todd and Beattle. The possibility of Bonds Beattie. The possibility of Bonds linking with Brooking, who is also included, is attractive. Mr Greenwood said the omission of Callaghan and McDermott had been made after much thought but Bob Paisley, the Liverpool manager, had said his players "need to play the Liverpool way".

Mr Greenwood added: "At Wembley we will be playing a little bit differently but I would like to pay tribute to the two players, especially Calleghan, for their offorts on England's behalf."

behalf."

Liuks with the Ipswich Town toam have been slightly roduced by leaving out Whymark and Woods who were in the original party for the match against Luxembourg last month, but the club's captain, Mills, is brought back and could be used as a full back or in midfield. It was at full back that he played as substitute for England in their 3—2 defeat of Italy in New York last year and when they lost 2—0 in Rome a year ago. The match in the United States, incidentally, drew attention to the international potential of the Chelsea captain, Wilkins who should have become an automatic choice by now. an automatic choice by now.

Despite his abhorrance of high and hopeful centres loosely aimed at the heads of large centre forwards, Mr Greenwood has decided to consider Latchford, who has scored 10 goals for Everton this season. Probably he believes that Barnes and Coppell have the skill to find Latchford in the right place at the right time. Certainly, Barnes has developed into a highly exciting winger and Coppell is having a fine season.

Having Coppell and Barnes attack the Italians from deep starting points and with Latchford and Trevor Francis available to take the chances provided, suggest a more positive approach but a victim of yet another variation on the forward line is Chamnon who is not included in the party.

Italy's manager, Enzo Benzot, yesterday announced a party of 18 players including all of the team who played in the recent game against Finland.

Faul Frucher, one of the young players who was thought to be under consideration for the England party, was seriously injured in a road accident yesterday. Futcher, who is 21 and plays with his pirl friend was not seriously hurt. Dr Peter Burrows, the Luton Town and England team doctor, visited Futcher yesterday and learnt that he would not play football for at least six weeks.

Shadow chief in the dark about Stuck's arrival

By John Blunsden Hans Stuck, whose place in the Brabham team has been taken by the world champion, NIM Landa, has signed a contract to drive for Shadow in 1978, according to a report from the Continent. Certainly the 26-year-old German has been having long discussions with the team's American owner, Don Nichols, but last night the Shadow manager, Alan Rees, was unable to confirm Stuck had signed a team contract.

"I know that we have been in touch with Suck.", Mr Rees said from the team's Northampton racing headquarters, "but to the best of my knowledge he is not in Europe at the present time so it may be that the news is a little premature."

There has been considerable speculation recently concerning the structure of the Shadow team for next year, but now that Alan Jones has moved to the Frank Williams team it would seem that Riccardo Patrese's chances of retaining his drive with Shedow. for whom he made his first formula one appearance this year, have been strengthened. The other driver with whom Shadow have been negotiating is Gunnar Nilsson, who has been expected to take over as the new team leader. However, the talented English driver has also been talking to other teams, and it seems unlikely that both Nilsson and Stuck will find a place with Shadow. All contractual arrangements are now being bandled personally by Don Nichols from his base in California, where he could not be reached for comment last might. iast night.

Miss Wade reaps her reward as tennis set find their Shangri-la

From Rex Bellamy Tennis Correspondent

Palm Springs, Nov 7 Virginia Wade is $35,000 richer after playing four singles matches and two doubles in the inaugural and two doubles in the inaugural Colgate series championships, which ended here yesterday. In a singles play-off she beat Kerry Reid 7—5, 6—2 to finish third ont of eight behind Christine Evert and Billie Jean King. Miss Wade and Françoise Durr won the four-team doubles championship. In the final they beat the Wimbledon champions, Helen Cawfey and Joanne Russell, 6—1, 4—6, 6—4.

Joanne Russell, 6—1, 4—5, 5—4.

The total prize fund was $250,000. Miss Evert and Mrs King won $75,000 and $40,000 respectively without playing doubles. Players and camp followers lived in pampered luxury and were lavishly entertained in a fashionable desert and mountain resort popular with show business celebrities. The weather was perfect. In short the tennis set found their Shangri-la—as Romald Coleman when Lost Horizon was filmal here.

The women's game thus

The important thing, though, is that like the men they now have a coordinated international circuit with a logical climax for those good enough to provide the control of the control for its

If the championships stay here, it is to be boped that in future they will be played entirely in daylight—thus providing constant daylight—thus providing constant playing conditions and benefiting to the full from the sunshine and the scenery. The round robin format should be slightly revised to produce a semi-final round as well as a final (or drastically revised to incorporate the virtues of the repechage system). A further amendment worth considering is an expansion of the doubles chamamendment worth considering is an expansion of the doubles cham-pionship—perhaps by turning this, too, into a round robin event. The crowd visibly and audibly enjoyed yesterday's doubles final, many spectators leaping to their feer and yelling their pleasure at some of the more richly textured rallies. There were exciting fluc-niations in the score during the tuations in the score during the second and third sets. But this triations in the score during the second and third sets. But this was not a consistently good match. There were two many unforced errors. The last game, though, was all winners. Miss Wade was serving (she was the only player who never lost her service) and Miss Durr hit four shrewdly-placed winners from the net. These two have won seven big titles with other partners but this was their first as a team.

Mrs Cawley and Miss Russell had joined forces after their expected partners defected. They won Wimbledon unseeded at the cost of only one set. But the feat was less widely-appreciated than it might have been ("Have these two ever won anything?" asked a colleague while they were taking tharge In the second set).

Mrs Cawley is an experienced player with a flair for doubles and her younger partner is big, strong and athlene. Miss Russell has also been scoring points with her amusing off-court mimicry of Miss Wade's accent.

The tactical strictures of the match were based on the booming power of Miss Wade and Miss Russell and the less spectacular manoeuvres of their partners. Miss Durr and Miss Wade began with such authority that they won the first five games. Everything was happening too fast for their opponents. Mrs Cawley, always diligent in her preparation, seemed to have left some of her best form on the practice court and Miss Russell lacked the experience to adjust her game to experience to adjust her game to an intimidating assault. But as Miss Durr pointed out afterwards, winning the test set easily against a good team can induce a hazardous degree of relaxation. That happened now, Mrs Cawley and Miss Russell won a tough second set and were going well until Miss Russell lost her service in the first game of the third set. Within a point of going 0—3 down, they bounced back to 2—all; but then lost three coasecutive games and, shortly afterwards, the match.

Three of the competiors here, Miss Evert, Mrs King and Miss Wade, have flown to San Francisco for the annual Wightman

Cup match between Britain and the United States. "It's going to depend rather a lot on me", Miss Wade said last evening. She obviously relished the responsibility.

Mr Morritt argued that there were many considerations but his particular point was not concerned with fakrness. Why should not a professional cricketer of such standing, he asked, make the standing, he asked, make the choke himself when he were free to do so and run the risk that his club might not wish to have him when he were available? He should be the one to decide whether he was to play for Mr Packer and his club were the ones to decide whether or not they wanted to play him at other times. The authorities should not be allowed no "inter-meddle".

Mr Morritz gave four reasons why the bons were contrary to county match?

The authorities were cutting off their nose to spite their face.

Domestic cricket did not depend on foreign Test matches.

The judge asked if guarantees to visiting teams would not be less generous supposing Test match cricker suffered. Mr Morritt answered that there was no evidence of that. Packer matches had been arranged for the next three (English) winters. In the first winter the guarantee to India had already been agreed; in the second the Australians were well able to maintain their guarantee to England; and in the third there was no competing series in Australia or elsewhere.

It was an "extraordinary situaon foreign Test matches.

It began on Wednesday afternoon and finished five days afternoon as he deployed his subtle arguments that Mr Websterhad to be gently quelled into silence by one of his counsel.

But if all anakes, whether wounded or not, commanded Mr Morritt's charm of manner and mellifluence of voice they would not have incurred Pope's opposition. He was the perfect counterpart to Mr Webster, leading for the defence, and they were justifiably (though, for all I know to the contrary, conventiously) congarulated by the judge.

The judge made a long intervention during Mr Morritt's speech han (and the potential ban, so far as the TCCE are concerned) as they affected would-be recruits to the Packer concerned if it could not be said that "private promoters are simply creaming off the best players from the contrary of the defence, and they were justificably (though, for all I know to the ladge made a long intervention during Mr Morritt's speech han (and the potential ban, so far as the TCCE are concerned) as they affected would-be recruits to the Packer concerned if it could not be said that "private promoters are simply creaming off the best players from the contrary of the defence, and they were justificated to be acting to protect cricket when, by seeking to exclude Packer players when available, they would to be acting to exclude Packer players when available, they wend amage."

A new cricket book by E. W. Swanon always makes an impact on the cricket world. In modern idiom, his image fars on some. Others find his prose ponderous. His followers, among them myseli, are legion and considerably outnumber the detractors.

captains who would want, or would be confidently accorded, such a responsibility.

The most informative parts of the book for students of cricket lore, perhaps, are the pages dealing with the history of The Cricketer magazine, which has now appeared continuously since April, 1921, and most of all, some new aspects of the 1932-33 hodyline controversy. Has any game other than cricket ever been involved in three such contentions and significant issues at different times as bodyline, the d'Oliveira affair and Kerry Packer?

Various snippets giving new background and information keep emerging about bodyline to this day. I am 30 sure that the time is not ripe for an authoritative an up-dated history on it to be produced.

Mr. Swanton's considered.

Mr Swanton's contribution to Mr Swanton's contribution to our latest knowledge on the sub-ject stems from an account given him by Gilbert Mant, the Reuter, correspondent on the four, who was later dissuaded by his firm from publishing a book on the matter.

Mellor can come up with treble chance

By Michael Phillips Racing Correspondent

By Michael Phillips
Racing Correspondent

At Folkestone today Stanley Mellor, and his stable jockey, Phillip Blacker, appear to have more than just an outside chance of winning three races with Westering Home (1.15), Trustful (3.15) and Mummy's Star (3.45). Westering Home, Mellor's runner in the first division of the Burwash Novices' Hurdle, used to be trained in Ireland, where he won on the flat at Galway and Leopardstown earlier this year.

Out of a half sister to that good stayer. Wrekin Rambler, who has already made a name for himself as a sire of jumpers, Westering Home looks just the sort to do well burdling and he is preferred now to Rube's Wicket, who won his first race under National Huntrales at Southwell. Mummy's Star, who won on the flat at Sandown Park and Great Yarmouth earlier this year, should win the second division for Meilor just as long as he can beast that consistent out somewhat disappointing animal, Chichester Bird, who was bearen eight lengths by Caranx at Windsor on Saturdey.

Mellor's versatile six-year-old, Trustful, will rus for the first time over fences in the Herstmonceux Novices' Steeplechase. Trustful has won on the flat and over hurdles for the stable and I gather that he has shown no little apprinde for jumping the bigger

He lacks the experience of Saintly Purchase, who was awarded a race of Ludlow recently after the disqualification of Sourise Hill, and Tiepolino, who finished fourth at Huningdon in his first steeplechase. But he has the ability to win.

Having won the Mackeson Gold Cup at Cheltenham on Saturday for his owner, Peter Harris, with Bachelor's Hall, Peter Condell is seeking a less ambitious target today with the same owner's eightyear-old, Coolishall. His objective is the Heathfield Handicap Sneeplechase which he should win, provided that he runs as well as he did at Ascot in April when he won a race confined to novices by a wide margin.

did at Ascot in April when he won a race confined to novices by a wide margin.

Not content with winning 110 races in England this year and more than £300,000 in prize money Peter Walwyn is off to Traiec in Ireland today to try to win a race with his unraced but quite promising two-year-old filly, Huzhinee.

The reason why Huzhinee did not run in England during our season was solely her aversion to starting smalls which she refused to enter at both Windsor and Ascot. The reason why she is bound for Traiec is the absence of any stalls there. Patrick Eddery, who has just become champion jockey for the fourth year in succession, is going there especially to ride her. An interested spectator at Fontwell Park yesterday was Ryan Price, who lives not far from the course at Findon. just to keep his hand in and himself amused, as he put it yesterday. Although he did not have a runner yesterday he told me that he would be racing four horses this season, Casino Boy, Le Soleil, Relight and Hard Attack.

Casino Boy and Le Soleil are both three-year-olds and they could easily be good enough to run at Cheltentham in March in the Triumph Hurdle, which their trainer has already won four times, first with Clair Soleil and then again with Castab, Beaver II and Moonlight Bay. Price told me yesterday that both Casino Boy and Le Soleil had already jumped well at home.

Although he was obviously disappointed to see Swallow Prince, a borse that he used to train earlier this year, run indifferently in the Silver Jubilee Hurdle, he was encouraged by the fact that the race was won by Out Mondeleur, who is by Levanter. Price used to train Lavanter and he was quick to point out that Levanter was also the sire of Casino Boy, who has won four races for him on the flat already and has the size, scope and class in his opinion to excel hurdling.

Out Monsteur was bred by Herbert Vickery, who also owned Levanter in his heyday. Mr Vickery gave Out Monsteur to his daughter, Mrs. Tommy Godling, the wife of the Epsom trainer, when he was a yearling and it was her colours that he carried successfully again yesterday.

Ridden by Zi-yeer-old Allen Webb, whose twenty-second winner he was, Out Monsteur ran on much too strongly in the closing stages for Nanghty B, who appears to be aptly named. Yesterday Nanghty B gave me the impres-

But recently he bought a house near Findon so that he could spend the whole season here in an attempt to become the leading amateur. He has 12 horses to ride this season split between Gifford and George Fairbaira, and Mister Know All was his third winner of the season.

Tamalin on the right mark in Hennessy

By Michael Seely

The embers of the flat season were finally extinguished at Doncaster on Saturday. The Minstrel's supreme courage has already assured the little colt of immortality. But it is the flashes of sheer class that set the imagination on fire and the memories of 1977 that I shall cherish are Artaius's complete annibilation of his field in the Sussex Stakes and the brilliant but wayward Marinsky's domination of his rivals in the July Cup.

domination of his rivals in the July Cup.

Besides the trainers Michael Phillips had space to mention in the review yesterday. Bruce Hobbs, ichael Stoute, Michael Easterby and Bill Watts all enjoyed their best season. The jockey who established himself firmly in the front rank was Geoffrey Baxter. The split-second timing shown on Calbina in the Stewards Cup, and again when winning the Jockey Club Cup on Grey Baron, places Baxter among the top riders in the land.

Now it is off with the old and on with the new. The steeple-chasers have been hard at work slace July 30, but now the pattern for the important races to come has started to form. From the little jumping I have watched so far, the five borass I would like to have on my side in their immediate engagements are Tamalin. The Dealer, Kas, Ballet Lord and True Wish.

Tamalin's performance when besten only one and a balf lengths by Zeta's Son in last year's Hennessy Gold Cup, conceding the winner 18th, was one of outstanding merit, judged by any yardsrick. He never reproduced that form and won only one race at Newcastle.

After a poor showing in the Cheltenham Gold Cup, Tamalin was dropped in the weights. He easily best Forest King at Carlisde on his reappearance and must be regarded as being extremely leniently treated in this season's Hennessy with 11st. Tamalin must have the ground on the soft side and, provided he gets it, will July Cup. Besides the trainers Michael lewbury. My other four are well-known Newbury.

My other four are well-known hurdlers, who have shown aptitude over fences in their only outlags in their new role. The Dealer jumped superbly when second to Kilbroney at Ascot. Given all the time in the world by John Francome, he flicked over his fences like an old hand, but did not challenge the fitter winner until between the lost two fences. Next time out it should be a different story. The Black and White Gold Cup at Ascot on November 19 is The Dealer's most important immediate target, but he will have a race beforehand.

Ballet Lord and Kas were lengths clear of their nearest opponents when Better Lord brought his rival down at the last fence at Doncaster on Friday. Both look certain future winners. The same applies to True Wish, who delighted Tony and Michael Dickinson when chasing home Another Dolly at Cheltenham last week.

The Dickinsons have withdrawn their five intended runners from Hexbam this aftermoon because of the firm ground. In the absence of Gay Spurtan, Forest King looks the obvious choke for the Roman Wall Handicap Steeplechase. But Forest King needs a yielding surface and I intend opposing him with Arthur Stephenson's Brown Barman, who is over a stone better off with Ken Hogg's eight-year-old for a seven length beating at Newcastle. Other likely winners at Hexham are Confinence in the Corstopistum Handicap Hurdle and Mallow in the second edition of the Borcovicus Novices Hardle.

But will the argument be settled? I doubt if. Minter already leads 2—0 and again the bout should go the distance with only a fraction in it it could, however, end with a cut-eye defeat for one. possibly affiner, which would be unsattsfactory. Minter, on the other hand, has had a disappointing year. The decision of the world champion, Rodrigo Valdes, to stay on top as long as possible after he had threatened to retire is not good news for those in the queue. And Minter, like Mr Durante, cannot wait for long, though it is not because he has only two changes of clothes. He and his manager are ready to go into the restaurant business. Not a prescription for a hungry fighter. However, be that as it may, Minter can be relied on to give his all tonight. But I feel it will be Finnegan's day.

Minter's southpaw stance is no longer a deterrent to Finnezea, who has the standard reply of a right cross ready for delivery on the invitation of dropped hands. Minter says he will not make the same mistakes this time but I believe he stands too square for a non-bustling southpaw and his left eye will canch a lot of rights. a non-bustling southpaw and his left eye will carch a lot of rights. Neither bover has the kind of whiplash blows one expects from middleweights of world class so it will be a long and bloody fight. Minter will have to keep a cook head and time his pauches well if he is to win.

In September as I waited for the doors of the Empire Pool to open for the Green-Price bout I saw Hope standing among the crowd looking for all the world like a spectator. No one in the queue spoke to him and I'm not sure a ticket tout didn't try to sell him a ticket. He is a quiet mon, but in the ring he is more the extrovert, taking the contest to his opponent. Tonight his opponent is regarded as something of a Luxembourg in World Cup football. Bonnetas's best win has been against the veteran Emile Griffith, and beyond that he has not met anvone the class of Hope.

So it should not be too difficult for Houe to take the Final step to the world championship bout with Rocy Mattolil, of Italy.

Incet Norton

Las Vegas, Nov 7.— Sooner or later, Muhammad All knows he us going to be in the ring again with Ken Norton and the 35-year-old world heavyweight champion is not overloyed at that prospect. All, who suffered a broken jaw in his first bout with Norton and escaped with two controversial decisions in their next two meetings, was literally cheering at the ringside for Jimmy Young to win on Saturday night.

Norton's split-decision triumph in the 15-round contest came as a painful surprise to All, who claims he will stick to his demand of a Si2m purse to soothe the pain. Doo king, a promoter, easy be can get All Sim or maybe even s9m, will that satisfy the champion?

All, atthred in a black three-piece business sult, said: "No. I got to have $12m, 'cause after taxes, I shill only get $4m. It's my last fight and I got to have it to retire."

Mr King fidnis money, whatever the final figure, and a champion's pride will bring the fourth All-Norton bout to the nation's gambling capital. He also said that he was entertaining spiralling offers from other locations, including Hawaii and Montreal. "I'd love to bring that fight here", the boxing entrepreneur said yesterday during a break from meetings with officials of Caesar's Peace.

All is already scheduled tor a title defence at the Las Vegas Hilton on February 15 against the winner of the November 13 match between the ninth-ranked Alfio Righetil. of Italy, and a former Olympic champion, Leon Spinks. If Spinks wins, as expected, in the bout promoted by Bob Arum, King's chief rival in the boxing business, he will be trying to take the crown away from Ali in only his eighth professional touter.

More doubts in the case of Cooper and McMahon

David Cooper and Michael McMahon are now in their eighth year of imprisonment for a crime they probably did not commit. Their case, which has already created a legal precedent, is once again under consideration by the Home Secretary of the day, and all the indications are that Mr Rees is having as much trouble with it as did his predecessor, Mr Roy Jenkins.

The two men were convicted in 1970 of the murder of a Luton postmaster. Since then they have come before the Court of Appeal on three separate occasions, two of the appeals being at the request of the Home Secretary. Both their solicitors are convinced of their innocence, to the unusual extent of involving them-to the unusual extent of involving them-selves in a campaign to clear them. Several MPs have interested themselves in the case, as has the organization Justice.

Even the authorities of the prison in which one of them is serving his time have made it clear, by their conduct towards him and his family, that they regard him him and his family, that they regard him as guiltless.

Now, the Home Secretary has been provided with two additional items of evidence which the most recent Court of Appeal, in July, 1976, did not have before it. One is an affidavit by a new witness testifying to the fact that McMahon was elsewhere at the time of the murder.

The other is evidence by the former Soho pornographer James Humohries. He claims that Kenneth Drury, the former head of Scotland Yard's flying squad, now in jail for various corruption offences, had talked to him about the Luton case, in which he bad been in charge of the in which he had been in charge of the investigation. He had, according to Eumphries, mentioned that he had "had a drink"—slang for accepting bribes—on the Luton case, and that the whole expedition had been set up by the main prosecution witness against Cooper and McMahon.

That evidence was not available of the Court of Appeal last year because Druty had at that time not been tried. At his trial it was accepted that Humphries, one of the main witnesses, had told the truth, and it was largely on his evidence that Drury was convicted. Humphries was even given early parole for his cooperation in getting Drury and other corrupt detectives convicted.

The details of the Luton case are convicted.

plicated, but the main aspects can be easily outlined. The murder took place in 1969.

outlined. The murder took place in 1969. At the trial the main prosecution witness was Alfred Matthews, a man with a long and serious criminal record, who said he was on the robbing expedition which ultimately resulted in the murder. He turned Queen's evidence and named the others with him as Cooper, McMahon and one Patrick Murphy.

In 1973, Murphy's conviction was quashed, after the Court of Appeal had heard the evidence of a witness claiming to have seen Murphy elsewhere at the relevant time. The Home Secretary referred the case of Cooper and McMahon to the Court of Appeal, on the basis that the quashing of Murphy's conviction suggested that Matthews might have been wrong about the other two men as well. The court, however, without hearing the evidence of Matthews, who was available to give it, took the view that there was nothing to suggest that his identification of Cooper and McMahon was open to question.

Subsequently, further evidence relevant of Cooper and McMahon was open to Home Secretary who again referred the case to the Court of Appeal. This time, the court heard Matthews (as well as other witnesses) in full.

The appeal judges specifically accepted that the case against Cooper and McMahon stood or fell on the evidence of Matthews. There was no corroboration. In their judgments, the judges referred to parts of Matthews's evidence as being unconvincing. They referred to him as a liar. One judge called some of his evidence a cock and bull story. But in spite of the scorn they poured on much of what Matthews has told them, they concluded that he had been truthful in naming. Cooper and McMabon as the perpetrators of the Lucon murder.

At the moment, the Home Secretary i awaiting a final report by Detective Chief Superintendent Roy Ranson, who is looking into the new evidence from Mr Richard into the new evidence from Mr Richard Hurn, who describes seeing McMahon on the day of the nurder. Mr Hurn could not himself remember the date, but other facts have pinpointed it to that day. The ridence came to light only recently, by accident, Mr Hurn having known McMahon only as "Mackie" and thus not having associated reports of the Luton case with

That, in addition to the evidence from Humphries about Drury, may cause the Humphries about Drury, may cause the Home Secretary to think again about the case. He has been asked to recommend the exercise of the royal prerogative of mercy. It is almost cartain, however, that mercy. It is almost certain, however, that he will not make a third reference to the Court of Appeal. That procedure is now under heavy strack from a number of sources, including Justice, which is at present looking into alternative ways to review the evidence in cases of alleged doubtful convictions.

He was rotally dependent on others. He could neither feed himself me attend to his rollet needs. self nor attend to his tollet needs. Before the accident, Mr Bolton was described as having been a cheerful and dynamic man, a hard worker, an extrovert with a great store of energy who played as eagenly as he worked.

Mr Bolton's intellect appeared to have escaped damage. He could understand and could also communicate, although not properly or easily. He had not lost control of his bladder or bowels and was still in hospital. Since last August he had been coming home for periods of one to four days. He wanted in come home and be looked after there. His wife wanted him to come home, and the doctors favoured the idea.

His Lordship accepted that in the interests of Mr Bolton's happi-ness and general well-being home would be better than hospital. He also accepted that at home Mr Bolton would be less exposed to the risk of infection than in hospital.

the risk of meeting tran as hospital.

There had been experimental weekends at home and his wife had been getting accustomed to managing him. But there were things she could not do, such as getting him into a bath. There were also things she could do but from which she would require rest and relief.

At the time of the accident Mr Bolton worked in a factory at Edmonton, where he had been apployed since 1947. He had been a pattern moulder and had risen from being a manual worker on the shop floor to a production manager with 600 to 700 men under him. His Lordship was satisfied that he would have taken his next and (probably) final step up in the industrial hierarchy and become works manager.

That conclusion affected the amounts to be allowed for special damage, loss of earnings to date

There was disagreement between the doctors as to Mr Bolton's expectation of life, but 10 years seemed right. On that basis, it was agreed that the multiplier should be seven, and general damages ceiculated on that basis would be £38,395.

He awarded a further 513,792 in respect of other items of claim, including £2,355 expenses in moving to a bungalow to be near his daughter and son-la-law; £5,000 for his wife's nursing services; and £4,500 for his son-in-law's loss of earnings due to a change of jobs so that he could give more assistance to Mr Bolton. His Lordship then considered damages for paln, suffering and loss of amenity. Mr Bolton could communicate, but it was laborious for him to spell out to his wife the words in which his thought has intellect was about the same as it had been, and she was guided and advised by him about all matters that had to be decided. He knew Morse code and could tap out—for he had use in his arms—messages intelligible to anyone who knew the code, Having regard to the impairment and impediment in his powers of communication, his Lordship would sward £40,000 for pain, suffering and loss of amenity.

The safety net our system of criminal justice needs

The cases of David Cooper and Michael McMahon, outlined above, are a disturb-ing illustration of the shortcomings of our method of dealing with appeals against

All criminal justice systems are vulner able to human error, but many have recognized the fact and established effecrecognized the fact and established effective appellate procedures that allow for subsequent correction. In England, however, the chances of a man who has been wrongly convicted establishing his innocence are dangerously slim. An excessive regard for financial considerations and sheer expediency has long since made our judiciary, in the exercise of its appellate duties, and our executive, in the exercise of its duty of review, unwilling to resift questions of fact which someone has already decided. The result is the real possibility that errors in our courts are slipping through unexposed.

possionity that errors in our courts are slipping through unexposed.

The capacity for error starts with the cherished institution of trial by jury. Jurors are, of course, a safeguard against professional and prosecution-minded tribunals, but, no doubt precisely because they are laymen, they are not required to give reasons for their verdicts so no one knows exactly how they came to be reached. One difficulty is that because jurors hear only the admissible evidence relevant to a particular defendant and not all of the facts relevant to the crime, verdicts may sometimes be based on an incomplete or even an inaccurate picture

The absence of any reasons makes an appeal based on the facts of the case (as opposed to the law) extremely difficult, and the Court of Appeal now virtually refuses to interfere unless the verdict as a whole can be shown to be unsafe or clearly perverse.

Such a foundle probably makes excellent

The mental illness schizo-phrenia is still one of the greatest scourges of modern living. One person in 100 in Britain still gets this devastating entered psychiatry more than 30 years ago only one in three patients ever recovered, mostly taking three or more years, in hospital or at home, to do so.

The remaining two thirds drifted into chronic madness in hospitals or incapacity in their homes. It is hard to estimate the mental suffering that schizophrenia still causes today, both to the patients and to all to sweep over the mental hosbrain operations, despite the frenzied opposition from philosophically and intellectually oriented psychiatrists, started to make about 50 per cent of early schizophrenic patients better much more rapidly. But we had still no means of maintaining their recovery, so that relapse was only too frequent, and one could just not go on repeating these physical treat-ments indefinitely on the same patient.

But what we did see was that the two thirds of supposed the jury room is the fear of what such a probe might reveal.

Procticalities impose a further restraint on convicted men. Unlike in many Continental systems, we only allow them to appeal once no matter what new evidence may later come to light. If unsuccessful, their only recourse is to enter the "noman's land" between the courts and the executive and petition the Home Office for review of their cases.

Each year, the Criminal Department at the Home Office receives about 4,000 such petitions. Many are instituite and are made without the benefit of any advice, since petitioners have no rights at all and are not entitled to legal aid. Normally the only hope is to try to persuade an MP or unofficial organization, such as Justice or the National Council for Civil Liberties, to sponsor the petition and to mount a per-the National Council for Civil Liberties, to sponsor the petition and to mount a persistent campaign in the hope of attracting some publicity.

The Criminal Department is, moreover. Ill-equinoed to review such a quantity of cases efficiently. Not only is it chronically understaffed, so that administrative delay mevitably prolongs any original injustice as happened for example in the celebrated case of Lazzlo Viras—but in procedures are also unsuitable. The petitioner cannot make oral representations and is virtually required to adduce new circumstances which point to the certainty of his ingocence rather than its probability : normally. in cases of substance, the Home Office requests a senior police officer to conduct a special investigation and to report, and such investigations—although never pub-lished—are known frequently to lack refuses to interfere unless the verdict as a whole can be shown to be unsafe or clearly perverse.

Such a hurdle probably makes excellent practical sense if our appeal courts are not to become hopelessly overburdeded, but the stark consequences is that we are failing to provide an effective appellate system on issues of fact. Juries are not only trusted to have considered the issues properly but are required to be silent about how it was done. Perhaps a large part of

Giving schizophrenics a better chance

Two further advances are at present showing even more promising findings. In one, the period in hospital can be shortened to very few weeks indeed. The patient is admitted, put under a light and semi-continuous sleep treatment, and while asleep, ECT and drugs are given to break up the abnormal given to break up the abnormal behaviour parterns, and insulin also used, where necessary, to speed up recovery in marked weight loss and general weak-ness. Furthermore, the addition of modified sleep throughout the whole time of treatment—up to six or more weeks—is the equivalent of giving an anaesthetic in a surgical operation.

There is no memory of the treatment period when the patient is brought out of sleep and is in his right mind again.

There is, in fact, no longer any need for people to suffer the agonies of a long schizophrenic or depressive illness, and treat-ments such as ECT, which cause such dread to so many parients, can be given without his ever knowing he had had it, if legally permissible. These patients, of course, still have to remain on the phenothiazines for several years afterwards to

The second recent advance is even more exciting. It is now generally recognized all over the world that a simple mineral,

lithium carbonate, stops or greatly modifies manic-depressive psychosis, an illness in which patients switch from sometimes long periods of deep depression to equally long periods of frenzied elation. How such a simple mineral works is not known and, of course, it casts great doubt on all the previous psychological theories of the causation of this mental illness, making much psycho-analytic theory look plainly ridiculous.

Many schlzophrenics likewise

drastic treatments often needed to bring many of them back

In 1952 it was discovered in France that a group of drugs called the phenothizzines could help schizophrenics, and this altered the whole treatment

The phenothiazines can now either be given by mouth or in weekly or mouthly depot injections. With their use alone,

many more patients now gradu ally get better, but it may take months when the drug is used alone. Combining all the treat-ments now available to us presents a totally different picture to the two thirds of patients who used to be "chronic" before the last war.

Several years ago two quite different and substantial groups of patients suffering from schizophrenia were followed up two years after being treated at St Thomas's. It was found that more than 80 per cent of them were at home, and mostly at work, with an average of only six weeks' hospital treatment necessary. But it was very intensive treatment. The Relapse often occurred if these drugs were temporarily stopped. No psychotherapy or special occupational therapy

Despite such pleasing results,

there has been a tendency in recent years for many doctors to go back to reliance on the phenothiazines alone, which may enormously increase the length of patients' stays in mental hospitals, and prolong the stays of the stays of final review of all other cases should be decided by a system which operates completely outside the courts.

The idea of some kind of independent review tribunal with more flexible rules of evidence and procedure has been mosted on several occasions, most recently by the Devlin Committee in 1976. Devlin put little flesh on the idea beyond suggesting that it might be staffed by those with experience of criminal appellate work and that "the feasibility of creating such a tribunal should be studied within the Home Office". To date, both Mr Roy Jenkins, and latterly Mr Merlyn Rees, have decided against undertaking such a study and have settled for resting on existing procedures, but a committee such a study and have settled for resting on existing procedures, but a committee of Justice is currently studying the problem.

The details of the scheme remain to be worked out. The priorities would be to arrange adequate staffing, publish a readily comprehensible set of rules showing the limits of the scheme, make available legal aid and representation in certain circumstances and allow for at least the possibility of an oral hearing, and to supply ressons—which is not done at present—when petitions are dismissed.

The suitable body to examine and work out the scheme as a whole would be a Royal Commission and it is regrettable that when, last June, the Home Secretary announced such a commission into the position of suspects, its terms of reference did not follow through to cover an examination of their position as convicted men.

The objections to such a scheme are not difficult to anticipate. It will be said that it challenges the authority of the courts and undermines our legal system. Yet, in practice, it would do no such thing. It would remove the flaw in the quality of our criminal justice and pro-vide a safety net for those men who would otherwise be on the public periods of iliness when they sit deeply depressed. They are too often diagnosed as "deteriorat-ing schizophrenics", and are sent to the chronic wards. Such cases will still be found in hundreds in the back wards of mental hospitals all over Eng-land, with their cries for help heins effectively democrated by being effectively dempened by the giving of tremendous doses

All one has to do with many of these cases is to greatly lower the dose of phenothiazines, sub the dose of phenothiazines, sub-stitute a therapeutic dose of lithium, and possibly add an anti-depressant drug. The patient will then emerge from his "chronic", supposedly de-teriorating schizophrenia into normality, and the lithium, and much smaller doses of phenothiszines, will keep him stabi-

Ignoring all forms of psycho-therapy, one should now easily be able to make 80 per cent of schizophrenics well again in a very short time, provided the patient has had, before the illness started, a proven ability to cope with life's many ordinary problems and has not been a totally inadequate person from a very early age. Psychiatry has still not found the means of turning a sow's ear into a silk purse by any drug or talk therapy. One can only restore the personality present before illness, unless one is prepared to use one of the increasingly modified and now relatively harmless forms of lencotomy lessening chronic tensions. This operation is becoming less and less necessary when all the other treatments are used to their maximum effectiveness, and the patients are not just kept quiet in their chronic and acute wards with large doses of the phenothiazines.

Evidence on striking out applications

In re Caines (deceased) Knapman v Servian and Another Before Sir Robert Megarry, Vice-Chancellor [Judgment delivered October 31]
Order 18, rule 19(2) of the Rules of the Supreme Court (sericing out pleadings and endorsements), is directed against the admission of evidence that seeks to support or disprove the convention that no reasonable cause of action is disclosed, not against an affidavit which has as its purpose the disclosure of an action. No doubt under the rules the court isself could exclude evidence, despite the failure of any of the parties to object to it and there must be some cases in which exclusion of the svidence would be wrong. [Judgment delivered October 31]

in which exclusion of the evidence would be wrong.

His Lordship, in a reserved judgment, dismissed a summons under Order 18, rule 19(1)(a) issued by the defendants, Mr Cecil Servian and Mr Frank Kenneth Liddiard Hives, seeking an order that the action began by an originating summons by the plainliff, Mr Eric David Knapman, should be dismissed on the ground that Mr Knapman had no locus standi, so bring the proceedings and that the proceedings and that the proceedings and that the proceedings disclosed no cause of action.

Rule 19 provides: "(1) The Court may ... order to be struck out or amended any pleading or the indorsement, on the ground that—(a) it discloses no reasonable cause of action. ... (2) No evidence shall be admissible on an application under paragraph (1)(a). (3) This rule shall, so far as application under paragraph (1)(a). (3) This rule shall, so far as application under paragraph (1)(a). (3) This rule shall, so far as application under paragraph as if the summons and a petrion as if the summons or petition, as the case may be, were a pleading."

or petition, as the case may be, were a pleading."

Mr Jonathan Playford for the defendants; Mr R. M. K. Gray.

pleadings to an originating summons.

Second, under rule 19(2) avidence was to be inadmissible "on" an application under rule 19(1) (a). In other words, when an application was made under rule 19(1)(a), the applicant could not put in evidence to support his application and the respondent could not put in evidence to relust the application. An application under the rule was not to be made into a preiminary hearing; but that ought not to enable a party to object to any affidavit that had already been put in for the purpose of supporting the originating summons; for such an affide vit was not evidence "on" the application and was put in for a different purpose.

Commissioners
The special charge levied by sec-The special charge levied by section 41 of the Finance Act, 1968, on individuals whose aggregate investment income for the year 1967-68 exceeded £3,000 plus the amount of his surtax personal allowances, imposed full liability on a person who was not domiciled in the United Kingdom but who had been a United Kingdom resident since 1919 but who had moved abroad during the 1967-68 tax year.

moved abroad during the 1967-68 tax year.

MR JUSTICE BRIGHTMAN, dismissing an appeal by the tax-payer, Mr Felix Neubergh, against an assessment on him to the special charge in the amount of £8,258, said that the taxpayer had sought to persuade him that there was an implication in section 41(3) of the Act to the effect that as an individual was hable to pay the special charge only if he was domiciled or resident at some time during 1967-63, by parity of reasoning he ought not to be hable for the charge to the extent of investment income arising after he had ceased to be so resident.

It was not possible to make any such implication; section 41(3) simply identified the individuals who were liable to the tax. Once an individual was so indentified, then subsection (1) imposed the charge to tax, and from the wording of the subsection the charge was to be computed on an annual basis. There was no provision for partial liability or for any form of apportionment of the tax that related to the income arising during the period prior to the tax-payer's departure.

Murder intent point certified

Regina v Ellerton

A point of law of general public importance is involved in the onestion whether a person is guilty of murder by reason of his unlawfully killing shother, intending to do grievous bodily harm.

The Court of Appeal (Lord Justice Lawton, Mr Justice Swanwich and Mr Justice Wien) so certified under section 33(2) of the Criminal Appeal Act 180?. Their Lordships disubsteed appeals by Amthony Colin Williamson, aged 22, of Coventry, and Stephen Ellerton, aged 30, of Bractord, both Coldstream Guardsmen, from their conviction at Reading Crown Court (Mr Justice Chapman) of the mar-der of Mr James Davidson, aged 24, of Slough.

In delivering the court's judgment on the appeal, Lord Justice Lawton said that the defendants had been drinking in London and were on their way to the barracks at Windsor in July last year. They attacked the victim, who was unable to give them a light for their cigarettes, in a lane near Eton. Ellerton kicked the victim to death and they threw his body off a bridge into a stream.

Williamson's defence of duress was unsupported by evidence, and Ellerton's submission that the trial judge had misdirected the jury on the intant accessary for murder failed.

the originating summons disclosed mo cause of action.

His Lordship thought that the operation of rule 19 in the case of an originating summons was something that the Rule Committee might with advantage consider. If Mr Gray's submission was sound, the application of the rule to as originating summons was likely to be nugatory in most cases.

In the present case, three considerations pointed to rule 19(1) being given its full scope in relations to the originating summons. First, i insused of "so far as applicable" in rule 19(3) the words had been "with any necessary modifications", then they would have given greater support for the contemitor that rule 19(1) applied generally to an originating summons. But even the phrase "so far as applicable could be read as peruliting and requiring some degree of flexibility in applying a rule drafted for writs and pleadings to an originating summons.

Second, under rule 19(2) evidence was to be inadmissible "on "an application under rule 19(1) (a), the applicant could not put in evidence to support has application and the respondent could not put in evidence to report has application and the respondent could not put in evidence to report has application and the respondent could not put in evidence to report has application and the respondent could not put in evidence to report has application and the respondent could not put in evidence to report has application and the respondent could not put in evidence to report has application and the respondent could not put in evidence to report has application and the respondent could not put in evidence to report has application and the respondent could not put in evidence to report has application and the respondent could not put in evidence to report has application and the respondent could not put in evidence to report has application and the respondent could not put in evidence to report the second could not put in evidence to report the second could not put in evidence to report the second could not be readed for write and prof

Not long before her death, Mr Knapman's solicitors had impulsed of the defendant's solicitors about the exact nature of the testator's interest in the house, and in perticular whether he had been a joint tenant and, if that was the case, any severance of the lock imancy had taken place. The information elicited was that the testator had been a joint tenant with his wife; that he had signed a notice of severance, but that as he was in hospital suffering from cancer (from which he died a week later), and his wife was a mental patient, the notice had not been served on her, if the joint tenancy had not been served on her, if the joint tenancy had not been served on her, if the joint tenancy had not been served on her, if the joint tenancy had not been served on her, if the joint tenancy had not been served on her, if the joint tenancy had not been served on her, if the joint tenancy had not been served on her, if the joint tenancy had not been served on her, if the joint tenancy had not been served on her, if the joint tenancy had not been served on her, if the joint tenancy interest passed by survivorship to his wife. # The retreat from Moscow, or how the BBC played Russian roulette and lost

The front cover of Radio Times, with its Cyrillic letter-ing and cuddly brown bear on a red background, tells us that The BBC is showing us some meeting. David Mills says:
The BBC is showing us some "First of all the trade union of the Soviet Union's proudest spectacles—opera, ballet, chees, main job was to raise productions. gymnastics and military parades. It seems an admirable to fulfil the spirit of Helsinki, where we all undertook "to promote the improvement of

A particularly imaginative cence, why there were so few idea was dreamt up by Paul Ellis and David Mills of The Money Programme. They would take two British Leyland workers to a Soviet car factory, let them work on the product.

After this, cooperation let them work on the production line and film the factory through their eyes. "Soviet television welcomed the idea with open arms. They were keen on it, says Paul Ellis. They were allowed to take their own camera crew to the town of Togliatti 600 miles east of Moscow, the home of the Soviet Fiat. hey were also promised facilities to film a second-hand car market and an interview with the Minister of Automobile

The worse blow fell when the team came back to Moscow to do their promised interview with the minister. David Mills was told that the interview was cancelled, because a member of his team had been rude to Sovier workers and referred to them as "pack horses". All these accusations are quite absurd, he says. He feels that he was quite entitled to ask about Czechoslovakia, or in-deed to film drunken workers, if there were any, but in fact he did not. He and his colleagues can only conclude that the charges were invented by the Soviet authorities to justify only last Wednesday. The prob-lem was that its main pre-senter, Michael Charlton, has in the past interviewed Andrei Sakharov and Alexander Sola-henitsyn. Plight reservations had been made and rooms booked for the team to spend this week in Moscow, when Mr Valery Zemskov, of the Soviet Embarsy told the BBC: "We have received an answer from Embassy told the BBC: "We have received an answer from Moscow about Mr Charlton's visa. The answer is that there is no reply." They might have added, as they have done in the past, that "no reply is also a reply." Anyway, they invited the BBC to replace Charlton and not to bother to send a camera crew. A Soviet crew would be provided. The BBC declined, cancelled the interviews and covered the parade from the studio in London.

The BBC's dilemma was that from the studio in London.

The BBC's dilemma was that in theory the sixtieth anniversary was an event and an opportunity. With the right BBC-Soviet diplomacy, wonderful programmes were there for the making. Producers were pressige as well as money. But excited by the challenge. Their as soon as something remotely initial approaches were greeted political appears, such as car with enthusiasm in Moscow. But as soon as they were actually there, by which time they had spent time and money and were by any normal standards expected to produce a usable programme they were put under pressure to change the agreed formula to conform more closely to Soviet wishes.

Sometimes in the past the BBC has compromised. In the spring of 1976, for instance, they delayed a televison prosubject of a Soviet complaint, because of a projected visit to Moscow by Director-General Charles Curran, (The Soviet authorities cancelled the visit authorities cancelled the visit anyway.) Producers are only human. They are bound to be tempted to accept Soviet terms in order to save a programme on which they have worked for weeks and they are not pleased when another department's programme about dissidents puts their plans at risk.

But on this occasion the BEC stood firm, preferring to can-cel projects rather than produce them under intolerproduce them under intolerable conditions, even though this has meant reducing Russian Week to a shadow of what was originally planned and promised. They are bitterly disappointed, but they feel that they were right to stay away from the slippery slope of compromise. And now they have another project to divert them. In February they will be them. In February they will be presenting China Week. And here, they say, they are getting "Wrong way mate. Back this way for Bulman", says Alec to the pilot, about 8,000 feet above Arnhem Land, in Australia's Northern Territory. The pilot is half looking at the map on his knees, trying to pick up the Wilton river. We find Bulman, buzz the strip to get rid of some horses, and land in a haze of heat, on red earth which is longing for the wet "

Not far away, by a cool lagoon with green green palms, we find the buffalo shooters, with their mobile abattoirs and freezers; we learn that they owe $3,000 in royalties to the Aboriginal owners of Bulman station. But they do have a contract. They have done their negotiating— which is more than can be said which is more mining companies, carriemen, fishermen and even government departments, all trying to put off this year's new reality, that Aborigines now own almost one fifth of the Northern Territory, an area five times the size of the United Kingdom.

They own their land, mostly he former Aboriginal the former Aboriginal Reserves, by a special, inalienable freehold title, granted to Aboriginal Trusts. (The rest of the territory is still Crown Land, leased.)

It was Mr Whitem's Labour government, early in 1973, which appointed Judge Woodward to recommend how tribal Aborigines in the Territory should be given back their land. The enabling Aboriginal land. The enabling Aboriginal Land Rights Act was passed at the end of last year by Mr Fraser's government, against some hostile lobbying by the Government's own supporters. Most Aborigines, still fearful of mining interests behind the Government, will be voting Labour in the general election on December 10.

n December 10. In half a dozen electorates in north Queensland, remote Western Australia and the Ter-Western Australia and the Territory, their votes will be influential, decisive perhaps in a couple. But in the Australian population of 14,000,000 there are only 150,000 Aborigines, of whom about 40,000 are tribal, full-blood people. Their resi political power is in the Territory, where they are 26 percent of only 100,000 people, who return two Senators and one Member of the House of Representatives.

one Member of the House of Representatives.

Their most direct influence is in the Territory's Legislative Assembly, for which about 75 per cent of Aborigines voted Labour in the elections in August, cutting back the Country Liberal Perty's majority. Now, the deputy leader of the Labour Opposition is an Aboriginal, Mr Neville Perkins, a graduate of Sydney University. Mr Fraser has promised statehood for the Territory within three years, Territory within three years, which means that there could custody, possibly (as a medical witness who appeared on behalf of the family declared) "by an ever-zealous interrogator everstepping the mark", his widow is the greatest threat to those responsible, in view of the determination to continue pressing the case. Only publicity outside South Africa can protection to far just conceivably be an Aborig-inal Premier within a decade. Anyway, through the Austra-lian federal system, Aborigines will be getting much more in-fluence in Capberra.

will be getting much more influence in Capberra.

There is also a strong link between remote tropical Darwin and the nearby countries of South-East Asia. There is a private illegal radio link here with Fretilin forces in East Timor, and boats of refugees from Vietnam arrive regularly. Aboriginal school children from Yirrkals on Gove peninsula in Arnhem Land fly for holidays in Ball. The Northern Territory reminds Australians that they are a white minority in this part of the world; it is the black tribal Aborigines, many of whom are related to the traders who come across from Malaysra, Indonesia and the Philippines, that provide the link with the surrounding area.

lucurably, the Aborigines will get increasing support from Africa, Asia and the Pacific. Their political punch within Australia will be out of whatever the backlesh against that punch. Meanwhile their political awareness grows, as tribal people and others meet and mix in bodies like the government's advisory National Aboriginal Conference, which will be alerted on Navember 17 will be elected on November 12. Above all, through land ownership at last Aborigines are beginning to find security and peace after two centuries of oppression. From royalties will come more self-determination, less dependence upon politicians. They are growing more confident. Recently, at Borrolools in the Gulf country, I heard old men giving evidence, on oath, about their ancestors—eagles, kangaroos, dugong-who gave them their traditional title to 1,119 square miles of nearby

Judge Goohey, the Aborig-inal Land Commissioner, who has the power to recommend to the government that they should also be given the special freehold title to the vacant Crown Land which they claim, considered the evidence, given under cross-examination by counsel for mining, fishing and cattle interests.

There are two wholly Aborig-inal statutory bodies set up to represent tribal people, the Northern Land Council (based in Darwin) and the Central Land Council (based in Alice Springs). Both are employing Australian lawyers, and other professionals and academics, as well as hiring international

The Northern Land Council is being advised by Dr Nicholas Peterson, a Cambridge trained anthropologist, who was research officer to Judge Woodward, and by Mr Scephen Zorn, a young American from New York who worked with Professor Gordon Gaundry, of the Commonwealth Secretariat in London, to renegotiate the in London, to renegotiate the Bougainville copper agreement for the Papua New Guinea government. the monosonal north.

The Northern Land Council's first success came in May when Judge Fox reported to the government that about 4,500 square miles just west of Arnhem Land, between the East and South Alligator rivers, should become Aboriginal Land. He also recommended that Aboriginal opposition to uranium mining at Ranger. uranium mining at Ranger, Tabiluka and Koongarra Jabiuke and Koongarra should not be allowed to prevent its starting. However some of the environmental conditions imposed upon the companies, and the payments to Aborigines, will have to be negotiated with the Council. If the talks desdlock, then the soverment government may appoint an arbitrator whose conclusion

Aborigines, like all Australians, do not own the minerals; they do own the land, this will at last give them real economic and political power. Last month, for example, Mr Nonjiwarra Amaguka, one of the traditional leaders on Groots Eylandt, in the Gulf, persuaded his people to sup all the employees of a marganese mine from leaving the mining company's small meniog company's small mineral and special purposes leases on the island. The Aborigines hope it will force the company to renegonate with them the 1965 agreement made with the government to which they were not a perty. They want berter housing. from more royalties.

Aboriginal landowners may not be able to close established more so able to close established mines or prevent the opening of the new uranium mines discussed by Judge Fox, including Nabarlek in Arabem Land; but they can say "No" to any new mining. To overcome their veto the government will have to declare a "national interest" in the project—in which case the Aboriginal with terest" in the project—in which case the Aboriginal wish will prevail only if one House of the Parliament disagrees with the government. And when I say that it may be "useful" for me to write about this case today, I mean it in more than a general sense, for the widow of the victim has herself been detained, and is being held incomunicado by the police; the reason is presumably that the reason is presumably that she was not only leading the efforts to obtain a proper inquity into her busband's death, but had initiated legal proceedings against Kruger himself. Her life is, therefore, clearly in danger, and would have been, in her circumstances were her in her circumstances, even be-fore the actions of the past few weeks, designed as they were to destroy all serious non-

The dead man in the case similar to Biko's was called Mapetis Mohapi. He had been active, while at Turfloop College, in the South African Students' Organization (one of those benned in the recent swoops), and was later among the leaders of the Black People's Convention. In 1974 he was "banned" and restricted to King William's Town (he had been a resident of Durban). He occupied himself in working for the Zimele Trust, a body set up to care for former political prisotners and their femilies Mohani was 29 former political prisoners and their families. Monapi was 29; he had two young children. At the time of his benning he had been held in prison, in solutary confinement and of course without trial, for nearly six months. During that period he had been physically maltreated while undergoing interrogation; the police he accused included two whose names are frequently met with in such allegations about South African prisons: Captain Schoeman and Warrant Officer van Wyk, (Mohapi said that an attempt had been made to throttle him, and Captain Schoeman had threatened to hang him, Captain Schoeman words".) Later, Mohapi had himself instituted proceedings, over his treatment in prison, against Kruger, Mohapi was rearrested in July 1976, and held at the Kei Road prison, near East London. A few weeks later, it was announced that he had committed suicide by hansing. Some com-suicide by hanging. Some com-ments by people who knew him are relevant here. Father Stubbs, of the Community of the Resurrection, said that Mohapi was not the kind of man who would kill himself, and that Mohapi had described to him his experiences in his previous period of detention, and made clear how wall be had no reason to believe", says Father Stubbs, "that his char-acter was altered. He was a acter was altered. He was a man of great inner resources, confidence and commitment to his cause." One of his professional colleagues says of the alleged suicide, "He was not such a man. He was a driving force behind us and a trus fighter. During times of difficulty he was the one who kept us going and strong. His analysis of detention was that it was important in the struggle to surimportant in the struggle to survive all the blows meted out by the system."

A particularly interesting comment comes from Donald Woods, editor of the East London Daily Despatch: Woods knew Mohapi well, as he did Biko (be has been tireless and remorseless in his demands for an inquiry into Bike's death, and particularly in exposing Kruger's cover-up, and has now paid for his persistence by being "banned" himself), and being "banned" himself), and this is what he has to say on the subject:

I liked his sense of humour and the philosophical way he accepted perty harassment by the authorities. Not content with banning him, they kept threatening to evict him from his little house in Zwelltzha township, near King William's Town. He had been in detention before, and that hadn't got him down either. Nor had the torture of solitary confinement. Like most decainees, he knew more about the insides of prisons than about the insides of prisons than about the insides of

Following Mehapi's death, an inquest was arranged. Mrs Mohapi engaged two doctors to represent the family there; both of them were promptly edjournments, this year, finishing in July. The Government's pathologist said that death could have been brought about by any of three causes: anoxia (lack of oxygen), suffocation, or hanging. Since the police story was that Mobapi had hanged himself, the doctor was asked whether his condition could have been caused by the instrument that the police alleged he had used; he doubted it, but thought it might have been caused by some other material. (This suggests, obviously, that Mohapi was strangled before being hung up in his cell.) Much interest was provoked by the production of what purported to he a "suicide mote" from Mohapi. It was addressed to Captain Schoeman, and read, "This is just to say goodbye to you. You can carry on intercould have been caused by the

"This is just to say goodbye to you. You can carry on interrogating my dead body. Perhaps you will get what you want. Your friend, Mapetia." A police witness testified that it was in Mohapi's handwriting. But Mohapi wrote a sophisticated hand (he was, after all, a university graduate) and the note was written in a random he was in anything like a suicidel state. The magistrate at the inquest mixture of upper and lower case letters. An independent handwizing expert declared that the letter was not in the same hand as documents undoubsedly by Mohapi; "As a banker", he added, "I would never have passed the signature on the proper as countries." The magistrate at the inquest found that death was caused by anotic and suffocation as a result of hanging, and declared that it was not brought about by any act of omission or commission by any living person. But he did not deliver a formal verdict of suicide.

It should be added that the "suicide note" was only produced the day after Mohapi's death, and not at the time; in addition, it is worth drawing addition, it is worth drawing attention to the extreme improbability of Mohapi leaving a suicide note not for his family or friends, or for his professional or poditical colleagues, has fee his contained.

Nor is thet all. Evidence was given at the inquest by a young African woman, Miss Thenjiwe Ntintso. She had been arrested soon after Mohapi, and held in the same prison. She had been punched and kicked, and made to undergo the "standing torture" (in which the victim is compelled to stand motionless against a wall) for three dees and nights, without food, drink or a visit to the lavatory. The centenary tomorrow of John Thadeus Delane's retirement from the editor's chair at The Times will be reported elsewhere in this paper this week. Were he looking over my shoulder at this moment, pen poised to refine and redefine, he would find some things never change. The radical left and the Irish are still with us and there is nothing new about Grunwick or Belfast, as a dip into our internal archives

On June 2, 1848, Chartism was on the rampage, and the police were beleaguered. Yardley of the Yard wrote to Mr Delane about an allegedly subversive speech reported in the paper. Legal proceedings were in the offing "if evidence of the words spoken could be obtained."

Would the reporter or informant appear as a witness? Certainly. None of this nonsense their sources.

Then, to the mainland 1870 came the pioneer Irish terrorists, but our Victorian management exuded con-fidence: "We are again having a Fenian scare....

"I don't think it will come to anything . . and pray do not make yourself anxious about the safety of the place for we are too big to be seriously damaged by anything short of folly on our own part."

My anecdote last wack about Mr Francis Drake, a traveller, who was paged over Gazwick airport's public address system, is matched by one from Mr F. J. Friend, of Bushey, Watford.

me that an album containing six pages in his near handwriting, 5,000 words in all, goes on sale at Sotheby's today. The album belonged to the wife of the Rev Thomas Slade Jones, a headmaster of Isleworth Grammar School where Van Gogh taught art in 1876 when he was 23. The items include excerpts from the Bible, quotations from romantic writ-ers including Micheler and Henrick Conscience, and poems such as Katherine Hankey's far better reception than is possible on the medium wave band. Putting Radio 4 on to the long wave band in November 1978 will make in available as a complete service in England. Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. This is not a plan to kill off Radio 4, as Mr I. F. Baillie (November 2) supposes. Indeed, as he lives in Edinburgh be will as the lives in Edinburgh.

he will, in addition to this complete Radio 4 service, containe to receive

Radio Scotland at exactly the same point on the dial as he does now.

Our surveys indicate that out of 38 million radio sats just under 5 million are without a long wave bond, but as must households possess more than one receiver the number with no long wave carability at all is quite small. The fact is that the long wave has been a vital part of British broadcasting for over 50 years and we have con-sistently advised our listeners that they need a set covering all three wavebands—long, medium and VIIF—to enjoy the full rauge of BBC radio services. Many excellent receivers of this type are available at reasonable prices. Yours faithfully,

NOW THE FIREMEN

Firemen are a group of other trade unions. They are additional manpower to fill the workers rather prone to indus- always more than aware of the trial action, but to action of a peculiar kind. Several brigades are already restricting themselves to emergency working over their present 30 per cent claim; last year London firemen worked to rule for a month over a variety of financial and personal grievances; at the same time Belfast firemen were leaving some terrorist fires to burn because of dissatisfaction over danger money. In the summer of 1975 there was a national dispute that lasted fourteen weeks, principally to extract a promise of a normal phase one award the following November. Perhaps the long night watches waiting for the alarm to ring encourage brooding over discontents; whatever the reason,

But it is unlikely that a single individual was killed or put in serious danger because of any of these actions. Last year's work-to-rule was carefully contrived to ensure that there always were enough starions manned to meet expected fire-fighting needs; the Belfast men turned out readily enough if life or personal property were endangered. As Mr T. N. Watkins, general secretary of the Chief and Assistant Chief Fire Officers' Association (which is not involved in the current action) confessed in a letter in our columns last summer; "These services cannot use the industrial strike weapon as do extreme danger. . . . They therefore have to have recourse to often plainly ridiculous procedures in order to draw public attention to their plight. The Government knows well this

There is no reason to suppose that Britain's fire officers have suddenly lost all normal sense of responsibility. A week is a long time at the negotiating table. The threat of a strike is bound to alienate public sympathy. The disruption of services that must be involved obviously carries dangers, whether intended or not-even if a strike is not total and even if the Army is used to the greatest possible extent. Even routine work left unattended for too long can impair the effectiveness of a brigade. The Government, faced with so many more formidable and less scrupulous claimants. is clearly determined to contemplate the possibility of this strike without conceding the union's demands. One of the odd feuds that the service is prone to concerns overtime. For fully three years the union has banned all overtime (except in emergency, of course). Neither this nor all the working-to-rule won acceptance of an ancient and reasonable claim to have the abnormally long working week of forty-eight hours reduced to forty, with

AN AMNESTY UNDER DURESS

Hongkong seems to have been hit by a typhoon over the weekend, which looked until last night to be a good deal uglier than had been foreseen. The crisis that arose was neatly summed up when an official of the Independent Commission Against Corruption (ICAC) dialled 999 last week to call the police to deal with an invasion of its premises, including the roughing up of some of its staff, by policemen in revolt. In face this manifestation of police anger the Hongkong Government promptly declared an amnesty for all those who might have been involved in corrupt practices before January 1 this year with the exception of those against whom warrants had already been issued, others who have already been interviewed by the commission and police or civil servants who are now living outside Hongkong. This evoked an immediate and forceful reaction in some quarters protesting that the of the other criticisms were also amnesty had been too hurriedly muted by the much greater introduced. Milboni anticieni consultation and was plainly conceded under duress. Its effect, it was argued, would be to cut the ground from under the uphill task of ICAC besides being grossly unjust as between those who were still likely to be tried and sentenced and those who would now benefit from the amnesty. However, when some elements of the junior police seemed to be regarding the amnesty as inadequate, and threatened to march on Government House to demonstrate if it were not made complete without exceptions, the Government even more speedily passed a new law giving the police commissioner power summarily to dismiss any officers who wilfully disobeyed orders coupled with loss of pension rights.

The threat of anarchy and the immediately imposed penalties. seemed last night to have turned the tide. The police associations at all levels are said to have rallied with expressions of loyalty. Community organiza-tions offered their support the Government for amnesty, albeit regretting the circumstances in which it had had to be introduced. Most real breakdown of authority within the police force. The hotherds among the junior police have abandoned their protest could hardly pick on a harder march. The outcome may still place in which to uproot corrup-leave difficulties for ICAC but tion than Hongkong.

gap. Mr Rees conceded that point last week before the union decided to strike. Unlike the police, who recently accepted 10 per cent and an inquiry, the firemen have no acute recruitment problems, and no grievance about a missed phase one award.

The productivity of workers such as firemen is not easily measured. The number of people dying in fires has fallen slightly in the last three years; so has the real value of property destroyed. But the firemen may not deserve all the credit for that. What is certain is that five of them were killed on emergency service alone last year, and more than three hundred seriously injured. Their conduct yesterday should not obscure the courage and skill that their work entails. Like police and ambulance men (and other categories of workers in the public services) their responsibilities are such that in decency they cannot allow them to go undone. Governments have a special duty to ensure that the rewards of such workers do not suffer. Mr Rees has already promised to take note of the findings of an internal study of firemen's relative earnings. Perhaps permanent machinery to keep them under constant review would ease some of the existing sense of grievance. But as yet the firemen have not made out a case for an award out of line with the average pay settlements.

public feeling in Hongkong has shown forcibly that it wants order kept as well as corruption ended.

That is bound to be a task requiring firmness and finesse-a difficult combination. Given the endemic character of corruption in East Asian societies and given the commercial priorities in Hongkong it would be surprising if corruption had not taken root in an era of great economic expansion. In such circumstances money easily becomes the accepted mode of lubrication between business and the lower levels of the bureaucracy, between the public and some civil servants, most of all between any illegal or question-able activity and the law. Since ICAC was formed in 1974 it has pressed its case against civil servants and police. Unfortunately the underground activities such as drug trafficking are usually run by syndicates and are marked by police squads which come to resemble corrupt policemen can evade the contact. Even if they refuse to join they are likely to be silenced. One

DIFFERENT IDEOLOGIES, SAME PROBLEMS

Ten times since 1963 the British-Polish Round Table has gathcred together an assortment of politicians, officials, academics and others from the two countries to talk and drink together and try to throw a few bridges across the east-west divide. A core of regulars maintains coninuity while about a third of the participants are new each time. The tenth meeting took place last weekend in Britain. Similar coaferences with the Hungarians and the Russians are taking place soon but their history is much shorter. Poland enjoys a seniority appropriate to its special place in British concerns.

It would be easy but mistaken dismiss such meetings as talking shops having no discernible influence on the bard realities of politics. They serve a number of useful purposes. They build a network of personal relations which can deepen understanding on both sides. Official contacts are necessarily constrained and are liable to be less continuous in personal terms because politicians and diplomats change jobs frequently. Informal contacts can be a valuable supplement.

The meetings also provide a in attempts to bridge the continuous chart of changes in familiar differences over arms east-west relations. The Anglo-control and other aspects of Polish conference went through some rough periods, especially around 1968. At one time it was dominated by obsessive arguments about Germany, which have now died away. A more recent and also significant change is that a free and open discussion of the internal affairs of both countries is now possible, whereas at one time Poland's internal affairs were almost wholly out of bounds. This is partly the result of détente and partly the con-sequence of a humbler and more self-critical spirit on both sides. With the lights going out from time to time during the conference it was hardly possible to claim that the institutional machinery for representing the interests of British workers was wholly adequate. With the Polish regime still afraid of provoking riots if it raises meat prices the equivalent claim could scarcely be made for Poland either.

Thus even with all the obvious differences of structure and ideology there was sometimes more common ground in discussions on how to manage modern industrial societies than control and other aspects of Both relations. east-west countries recognize new challenges to their institutions, new problems in industrial rela tions and the need for new ideas on how to contain opposition within a political framework. In Poland discussion has been intense since the riots over higher meat prices last year, which were provoked partly by the failure of the consultations that allegedly preceded the increase. The regime is now aware of having to live not only with a largely private peasantry and a powerful Church but also with a more educated and demanding industrial working class which has tasted power. Its answers are supposed to emerge at a special party conference early next year. Whether they will be any more effective than previous answers remains to be seen but willingness to admit the existence of a problem has not always been as open as it is now, which is at least a starting point for progress as well as a point of contact in east-west relations.

Situation in Rhodesia From Mr Geoffrey Pattie, MP for Chartsey and Walton (Conservative) Sir, The Bishop of Chelmsford (November 3) urges a recognition of reality about the situation in Rhodesia. He also asserts that "it is only by the negotiation of the transfer of power to the majority that the nightmare of the period of the armed struggle can be brought to an end".

This statement reveals a touching helief, rather typical of the think-ing of the British Council of Churches, that at the time of transfer, all of the 3,600 armed terrorists at present operating inside Rhodesia will come in from the bush and lay down their arms. I would share the Bishop's pleasure if this happens but the signs are not propitious.

The reality is that armed clashes have already occurred between the two wings of the Patriotic Front. The reality is the intense rivalry between those fighting in the bush and those waiting to achieve the fruits of victory from the comparative safety of Salisbury. The reality is the unbridgeable nature of the inter tribal animosity. All of this is likely to mean, sadly, that unless there are adequate safeguards for black and white Rhodesians, the transfer will by no means signal the end of the armed struggle, rather will ir herald the commencement of a new and bloodier phase. Thefts from cars

From Mr Tom Anderson-Slight Sir, During the last five days no less than three cars used by my staff or family have been broken into sod had their radios and cassettes stolen while parked in NCP car parks in Central London. On reporting these incidents to the police we have been told that in the last 15 days or so there have no less than 400 similar incidents.

Car park crime is reaching epidemic proportions while the car park operators disclaim all respon-sibility and the police appear unable, even pointerested, in taking action to prevent it. It is surely iniquitous that motorists who go to the trouble of parking off the streets should be so victimized. Yours faithfully, TOM ANDERSON-SLIGHT. ### Caring for works of art

From Dr Peter Cannon-Brookes Sir, It is with great sadness that I read the strictures of Sir Rugh Casson (letter of November 1) on those lenders to art exhibitions who those lembers to art exhibitious who insist upon adequate environmental control of display galleries as a prerequisite for lending. Without wishing to become involved in the particular problems of the Somerset House galleries, it is perhaps an opportune moment to reiterate the fundamental principles which apply to all loan exhibitions.

All works of art made of organic or sensitive materials are subject to natural decay and the rate of decay depends upon the environmental conditions to which they are exposed. The traditional view, that so long as reasonable oure is taken of a loan no additional deterioration takes place as a direct result of its transport and display, has in the light of modern scientific evidence been untenable for many

The exhibition organizer has to accept that the transportation of a fregile work of art and its display fragile work of art and its display in a strange environment inevitably results in an increased rate of deterioration. Thus the exhibition organizer has a moral responsibility, both to the lender and to posterity, to assess carefully the short-term and long-term gains to be made from the exhibition in order to be certain that they are at least commensurare that they are at least commensurate with that increased rate of deteriorwith that increased rate of deterior-ation, and to take reasonable pre-cautions to reduce to an absolute minimum that element of the increased rate of deterioration which can be directly attributed to the environmental conditions under which the loan is to be transported and exhibited.

The responsible lender is a trustee for posterity, balancing the demands of contemporary society against those of future generations, in the clear knowledge that the life of the work of art is finite. Thus there are occasions when we must deary ourselves the selfish pleasure of emposing morels of ert to unstable. desty ourselves the series pleasure of exposing works of ert to unstable or bostile environments and the taking for ourselves an excessive proportion of their lives. This is obviously true of watercolours and other light-sensitive works of art.

It can be argued that there are now an excessive number of art exhibitions, and the principal role exhibitions, and the principal role of the International Exhibitions Committee of the International Council of Museums has been for the last three years one of reminding exhibition organizers of their serious responsibilities. ICOM Patronage of exhibitions is today only granted when the organizers can offer display facilities with adequate environmental control, and thus ICOM patronage offers a limited guarantee to lenders. The International Exhibitions Committee is currently preparing an Exhibition Organizers Manual covering all aspects of the organization and administration of loan exhibitions to order to add muscle to the "ICOM Guidelines for Loans" which have already been accepted as the official policy of UNESCO towards international loan exhibitions of works of art ards international tions of works of art. No doubt the windows of Burlington House, like those at Windsor con House, like mose at windsor Castle, will continue to be opened when the rooms become too hot, but increasing numbers of lenders will insist upon the "experts, air conditioning and humidification" which Sir Hugh Casson derides.

PETER CANNON-BROOKES, President, International Exhibitions Committee, ICOM, City Museum and Art Gallery, Birmingham.

From Professor C. R. Dodwell

Sir, Dr Farr's article ("Saving the Bellini for Britain", November 4) is most welcome. There is, however is most welcome. There is, however, another very positive way in which the Government can help regional galleries with little or no expense to themselves. This is by indemnifying the costs of important exhibitions, a privilege already enjoyed by national galleries and museums in London and also, to everyone's satisfaction, by the Arts Countil. These costs are a very ceal Council. These costs are a very real drain on the slender resources of the galleries in the regions. Yours sincerely, REGINALD DODWELL

The Zinoviev letter

From Mr Per Egil Hegge Sir, May I add a detail or two to the debate about the Zinoviev letter?

In her memoirs, We Were All Supposed to Die, as the original Swedish title could be translated, the late Mrs Aino Kuusinen, Otto Kuusinen's widow, describes the consternation in Komentern headquarters in Moscow when the letter was published in England.

The Koudintern staff spotted right away that the letter was, technically speaking, a fake, because her husband's middle initial V (for Ville) was omitted in the published version. On the other hand the contents were disturbingly close to instructions that had actually been sent to British Communists from headquarters in Moscow.

To contain the damage, the Komintern staff staged a complicated cover-up operation: A British trade union delegation was invited and given a conducted tour of the Komintern archives, which had been completely purged of all damaging material, and new, faked correspondence had been put in the files. Very vividly, she describes the laughter ringing through the build-ing as the British delegation was leaving convinced that the Komin-tern had never tried to meddle in British politics.

As Lenin might have put it, the question is who fakes what. I am, Sir, your obedient servant, PER EGIL HEGGE, Washington Correspondent of

From Mr Cecil Gould

Sir, We have been told, at intervals throughour at least my own life, that this country is on its last legs, and nothing supports the idea more than the resignation with which we accept without protest indignity after indignity and outrage after outrage at the hands of selfish and irresponsible minorities. We are forced to go without bread, rail and air services are dislocated and can-celled, millions are deprived of electricity, relevision and theatrical performances are disrupted, and what do we do? Cleaning of Parliament From Mr R. J. Negus

Sir, I read with amazement the letter from Mr R. S. Conibear (November 3).

Surely he cannot be serious in suggesting that soot and dirt deposits enhance the stonework of Farliament. If the architect had wanted a black building, he would have used that colour stone. He designed the fine ornamental carvings to be seen. not to be covered up and disfigured with harmful soot and dirt deposits, which gradually eat into the stone. The main reason for cleaning a building is to preserve it, and to arrest the principal cause of deca,, namely, the sulphuric acid contained in the dirt. It follows, therefore, that cleaning saves money by avoiding costly reinstatement later, it also incoverany defects such as open joints which, if left, could lend to serious problems in the future. Obviously I would like to see Parliament cleaned, not only because I am prejudiced, but to save the building from having to have the stonework reinstated as and where decay occurs in the future. That would look even worse than a dirty building, and cost a sight more money in the long term. Yours faithfully,

Built in 180, and listed grade 2 starred, the house was acquired by the council 99 years ago and used first as a museum and later as central and local government offices. It has been empty since 1966 and has been badly damaged by yandals, although the stonework is said to be still in good repair.

Railway prints came of age as a collecting field at Phillips's yesterday when a collection formed by the late Mr Arthur Underwood since the last war was sold for £32,259. Every one of the 146 lots in the sale found a buyer.

Mr Underwood was formerly Phillips's soficitor; it was on the advice of one of his other clients, advice of one of his other clients, Whikam Russell Filmt, the artist, that he began to collect. At the end of the war Russell Filmt advised him that if he wanted to put his money into collecting to choose an unfashionable field. The advice certainly paid off. The collection was exhibited at the Victoria and Albert Museum in 1974.

The highest price paid for an individual print was £820 paid by Leggatt for a "View of a landslip ... between Dawlish and Trigomouth." It cost Mr Underwood 12 guiness in 1958; Phillips were estimating £40 for it. The well drawn print depicts an amusing scene: a hardslip her blocked the line and pessengers are being transferred round it from one train to another.

Leggatt, the London dealer, was one of the principal buyers, but on this lot he was bidding against a determined local collector from Dawlish. Richard Green was the other big buyer.

The Great Western Railway proved to have the greatest financial draw. A hand-coloured ithograph by John Cooke Bourne of "The Engine House, Swindon" was sold for £500 (estimate £50 to £60) for Bourne's "West Front of No 1 Tunnel", cut but of the bide page of the History and Descrip-

Radiocarbon dating: New technique

Radiocarbon dating is widely used to date wood and charcoal remains from historic and pre-historic sites back some 10,000 years. Radiocarbon dates have been tied to real calendar dates by independent historical evidence where that has been available, but in some cases deviations from the expected theoretical relationship have cast doubt on the precision and worldwide applicability of radiocarbon scales derived from material found in one region.

A relatively recent absolute calibration has been made between radiocarbon dates and the treoring chronology derived from the North American bristlecone pine. That showed up some rather disturbing "wiggles" in the calibraturbing "wiggles" in the calibration.

Subfossil oaks preserved in the peat bogs of Northern Ireland are enabling scientists at the Queen's University of Belfast to establish a new radiocarbon chronology that will eventually allow European archaeologists to place more confidence in the dates of ancient objects than has so far been possible.

Its completion will need the discovery of subfossil oaks covering a few remaining gaps. According to Dr J. Pilcher, who did the work with Mr G. Pearson, Dr M. G. L. Baille and Dr J. Hillam, that will largely be a matter of luck Given that luck, Dr Pilcher estimates that it will take another two years to complete the treering chronology and the matching radiocarbon analysis. That will then provide a calibrated radiocarbon curve tied firmly to calendar dates, which will be of very great use to European prehistorians.

MR KEITH VAUGHAN An individualistic British painter

died on November 4 at the age rents of modern art. of 65, was best known as a painter of striking figure compositions in which he sought for a balance between the recognizable, though much simplified. nude figure and the purely abstract arrangement of line and areas of form and colour. A. "assembly" of figures he entitled "Eldorado Banal", painted last year and included in the Royal Academy's survey of British painting, 1952-1977.

He used the word "assembly " of such compositions with their sharp contrasts of strongly silhouetted shapes, as he put it, to suggest an echo of the humanist tradition without mak-ing reference to any historical or mythological theme". He applied the principle behind his numerous compositions of this kind to a number of formalized landscapes executed like most of his work from recollected impressions and not directly from nature.

From 1941 to 1946 he was German interpreter in a PoW camp in Yorkshire. He was later occupied in art teaching at the Camberwell School of Art, the Central School, and from 1954, as visiting teacher at the Slade School.

The first exhibitions of his paintings and drawings were held at the Lefevre Gallery in 1942 and 1946, followed by fre-quent exhibitions in Britain and America. The "Theseus" mural decoration in the Dome of Discovery, of the Festival of Britain, 1951, was one of his larger undertakings. A full-scale retrospective exhibition was shown at the Whitechapel Art Gallery in 1962, the occa-sion also of an Arts Council tour. He was made CBE in 1965.

Vaughan was widely travelled. He was a visiting resident artist at Iowa State University in 1959. and it is amportant to quote a relatively low rate of pre-mium, is to incorporate the port delay clause. It has the effect of protecting, the in-surers' position in the event of delay. The port delay clause limits cover for goods on brand vassals at worte of on board vessels at ports of discharge to 60 days after the vessel's arrival. Insurers, therefore, know the extent of their cover for the initial premium quoted.

If cover is required beyond the 60-day period, insurers must be notified promptly, and an additional premion is likely to be payable for the excess period. The port delay clause is not in universal use, however. It is a versal use, however. It is a form of protection which can be used by an insurer, where considered appropriate, considered appropriate.

Last year, the idea was extended to war risks. The position under the normal war clauses is that cover is limited to 15 days after the arrival of the vessel at the port of discharge, or prior discharge of the particular cargo, with special provisions applying at transshipping ports.

The London insurance market is generally looked on as being the leading war risks market and, to give risks market and, to give underwriters protection in the event of delay, it defined the word "arrival" as when "the vessel is anchored, moored or otherwise secured at a berth or place within the harbour authority area. If such a berth or place is not available, arrival is deemed to have occurred when the vessel first anchors, moors or otherwise when the vessel first anchors, moors or otherwise secures either at or off the intended discharge port."

From the underwriters' point of view, the great advantage of cargo being dispatched by air is that they are off risk quite quickly. There is, however, the danger that packing may not be of a sofficiently high standard. What has to be remembered is that there is still the journey to and from remembered is that there is still the journey to and from the airport at each end, and the handling risks. It is at those stages when goods are most susceptible to damage, and those points have to be borne in mind when air cargo is insured.

There have been plenty of difficulties in connexion with exports travelling over-land to the Middle East. In the event of an accident to a vehicle, all too often it bas been almost stripped, with the result that claims experience has been very anxious to reduce the level of losses on the Middle East run. Much depends on the operator. An experienced operator usually can cope; but there are still drivers with little or no experience. of the area trying to join the get-rich-quick brigade, which can result in hardship for all concerned.

Yesterday's figures from the Department of Industry confirm that the rate of inflation has slowed down quite markedly in the past few months. The index for new material prices now stands below the level of January this year.

Although the deceleration in wholesalers' output prices is not as great as had been expected, it is still noticeable. As the chart shows, the six-monthly rate of increase has fallen from over 20 per cent in June to 12.5 per cent last month.

Mr Eric Varley, Secretary of State for Industry, described yesterday's figures as further substantial evidence that inflation is slowing down. The Government expects to hit its target of a 12-13 per cent year on year itse in retail prices by December December.
The other official targets are for a single figure rise in retail prices by the middle of next year, fulling to 61 per cent by the end of 1978. However, these are conditional on an average earnings increase of 10 per cene is the present pay round, and virtually everybody expects the earnings figure to turn out well above this

Food prices are now having a considerable moderating effect on wholesale prices in general. Factory gate charges by other manufacturers rose by per cent increase in

In the past three months the output prices of non-food menufacturers have risen by 2.7 per cent. This compares to a rise of 31 per cent in the previous times amonths, April to July. Althoug the pound's effective exchange rate index remained steady in October the rate against the dollar rose by 11 per cent. This belied to reduce the cost of imports which are invoiced in dollars. Chief among these is oil. The cost of imported wood puip also fell

A sharp fall in coffee prices and cheaper cocoa and cereals, led to a 1 per cent fall in the raw material costs of food manufactures. These have dropped by 4 per cent in the past three months.

There was by contrast a small drop in food manufacturers' Dollar stronger: Sterling closed prices for the third month 20 points down against the dollar at $1.8030 in very quiet trading on the foreign exclusion most sectors. This may represent a widening of profit margins since companies bave not recently had large increases costs.

UDS wins £1.23m suit against Peat Marwick

By Nicholas Hirst

A subsidiary of United Drapery Stores has won a DM5m action (£1.23m) in a German court against the continental practice of Peat Marwick Mitchell, in which the English portnership has a share.

Mr John Grenside, senior partner of Pear's United Kingdom practice, said last night: "It is alleged by the UDS side that they received poor advice from our Frankfurt firm. This is disputed by us but they have won the first round." He expected that an appeal would be lodged, but legal advice was being sought on the advice was being sought on the next step to take.

The damages were awarded in a preliminary action in Frankfurt brought by the UDS subsidiary A. Turklitz Grund-stucksKG of Berkin against Peaus, relating to professional services given over the acquisition of Rieberhaus of Frankfurt.

Bieberhaus was a fast-growing cut-price electrical goods retailer which collapsed in March, 1975, costing the UDS Group £4m. Bieberhaus was acquired by the Hubner Group, in which UDS had a 50 per cent stake. Hubner was operated in partnership with the German Turklitz family.

Government spending 4pc off ceiling

Spending by central government is running at a level 4 per cent below what was expected when cash limits for the current financial, year were set. This represents an even larger margin of underspending than occurred during the whole of the financial year 1976/77.

whose of the mancial year 1976//.

Treasury officials disclosed this yesterday before an all-party Commons committee examining the background and likely economic consequences of the package of measures announced two weeks ago by Mr Haslaw ago by Mr Healey.

According to Mr John Anson, Deputy Secretary for General Expenditure and chief Treasury witness, central government spending so far in the 1977/78 financial year was running at a level of about 96 per cent of the amount allowed for under

The relationship between the cash limits and the present profiles of expenditure, he revealed, was lower than a year ago. In fact, for the whole of 1976/77, Governing In fact, for the whole of 1976/77, Government departments and local councils underspent by some £1,000m.

The general sub-committee of the Expenditure Committee, under the chairmanship of Mr Michael English, Labour MP for Nottingham, West, were also told that the reason for the sharp £2,000m Chancellor's latest measures) was very largely due to higher-than-expected tax receipts. Such receipts had been about £1,750m above forecast estimates.

Treasury vitnesses included Mr Frank Cassell, under-secretary, responsible for medium-term policy analysis; Miss Patricia Brown, under-secretary, responsible for general expenditure analysis; and Mr Robin Butler, under-secretary, responsible for general expenditure policy.

for general expenditure policy.

Contrary to the view expressed in a special paper provided by Mr Terry Ward of the Department of Applied Economics, Cambridge, and special adviser to the committee, the Treasury witnesses insisted that the planned 3½ per cent growth in the economy next year was sufficient to "turn the tide" of unemployment.

In his paper, Mr Ward had argued that for unemployment to show a significant fall would require either a growth rate much higher than 4 per cent, or a significant increase in public sector employment (and hence a reversal of present policy), or a decline in the rate of productivity growth below the historical trend.

The Treasury wimesses suggested that such a decline in productivity probably would start to bring unemployment down from its present very high level. Allowing for the time lags, the Chancellor's measures would begin to turn the tide of unemployment during 1978.

Irrespective of what happened to the level of earnings under the stage three guidelines, the year-on-year inflation rate would fall during the next six months. However, if earnings rose by 15 per cent, rather than the 10 per cent sought by the Chancellor, inflation would climb back into double figures during 1978, after falling briefly to single figures, and continue to rise thereafter.

The Treasury witnesses denied that the Chancellor's measures were insufficient to offset the contractory influence on the economy of the amount—f-2,000m, by which the Public Sector Borrowing Requirement had been undershooting earlier expecta-

Vauxhall offers 3.5 pc more for skilled workers to end standstill

By Clifford Webb
In a move to end the strike of skilled workers which has closed all its factories, Vauxhall Motors yesterday offered a 3.5 per cent increase to top grade skilled operatives.
This is additional to the basic 10 per cent and productivity bonus worth a minimum of £3 a week already offered to all 24.500 hourly-paid amployees.

employees.
This development follows last week's abortive attempt to break the strike by reopening all Vauxhall factories for anyall Vauxiall factories for any-one willing to work. The 4,000 electricians and other crafts-men on strike ignored the cull and the next day Vauxiall was forced to close again and lay off some 20,000 car and com-mercial vehicle workers. A company spokesman said last night: "The proposals for restoring differentials follows talks over the weekend. We are now waiting to hear the men's reactions but that will take time because this is a very complicated dispute".

He denied that a new £20m loan announced yesterday by the parent General Motors Corporation had become neces-sary because the fortnight-old strike was causing cash flow

"This is part of a restruc-turing of Vauxhall's finances, which began more than six months ago and is intended to months ago and is intended to reduce our short-term indebted-ness, provide day-to-day work-ing capital and, in the long term, assist our capital expen-diture programme. he said. ### Texan-style Harrods in the heart of Washington

When Texans do things, they do them in a style and in a manner that suggests all too often that they have more dollars than sense. This is exactly the impression one gets as one walks through the most layuring department. luxurious department store that Washington has ever seen. The Texas-based Neiman-Marcus group today opened a new 120,000 sq ft store which gives customers the chance to order, among other things, u $16,000 windmill to reduce home energy costs. One can also buy off the shelf a $100,000 Russian sable coat, a set of diamond and ruby jewelry for $150,000 and an assortment of such almost useless gifts as a $175,000 gold-plated hard hat for the construction size and struction site, and an ugly glass sculptured monkey for 53,500 Along with this Washington answer to Harrods in London comes a sense of confidence rarely seen in the American business community these days.

Mr Richard Marcus, the company's vice-chairman, says that

Mr Geffen a 7.7 per cent holdis about $7m to $8m, and the he expects the store to break even in its first full year. Mr Marcus adds that he is scouting around location for a store

Washington area, and that he is planning a series of stores like this one for California. His store offers a range of ressonably priced products; but its image is based on its top priced wares, an image that for all its Texan brashness makes a lot of money. The group has spent years cleverly developing a reputa-tion for affering the finest products money can buy from anywhere in the world. Some 30 per cent of all the goods on show at the new Washington store are imported. The cost of goods never appears to be a consideration to the group's buyers. If a customer, for example, is dis-satisfied with a silk scarf with a Raoul Duffy picture on it for $180, then he or she can get the original Duffy painting from Neiman - Marcus for $18,000.

Not only has the group discovered that some of the richest people in America live in Washington (a discovery that prompted Eloomingdales of New York to open two of New York to open two stores here last year), but its parent company, the Carter Hawley Hale group, has clearly decided that developing the Neiman-Marcus group offers a better prospect of high profits than, for example, developing foreign interests. ### State boards' members ponder lawsuit on pay

By Malcolm Brown Nationalized industry board members are to consider today whether they should join senior civil servants in legal action to force the Government to mplement substantial salary Mr Deuis Dodds chairman of the Association of Members of State Industry Boards, said yesterday that the matter would be discussed at tonight's meeting of the association's executive committee.

This follows the announcement by the Institution of Pro-fessional Civil Servants that it had taken legal advice on the Government's failure to imple-ment fully the Boyle Comment theny the soyre com-mission's recommendations on pay for top civil servants. Mr William McCall, general secre-tary of the IPCS, said legal action would now be taken. The AMSIB will ask the institution for a copy of their counsel's opinion. Mr Dodds said that many state board members were now receiving between £2,000 and £3,000 less than their immediate sub-ordinates because of the Government's failure to act. There was also a feeling, he added, that state industry board member were being discriminated against Senior civil servants had at least received a partial increase.

"They got a half-Boyle, we got no Boyle at all," Mr Dodds said. It would be a great pity if legal action had to be taken, he went on. The state board directors would much prefer to proceed by discussion, and ranted the Government simply to implement the Boyle

Banker calls for German wage ceiling of 5.5 pc

From Peter Norman Bonn, Nov 7 Dr Ludwig Poullain, chief executive of the Westdeutsche Landesbank, today warned Germany's trade unions and employers that they must limit wage increases to 5.5 per cent next year if the economy is to expand as planned. Such warnings are commonplace every autumn as the annual round of collective wage bargaining slowly gets under way, but this year they are more appropriate. Germany's original real growth target of 5.5 per cent, on which the 1977 wage increases of between 6 and 7 per cent were based, will be undershot by a margin of about 21 percentage points.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

How ICL defends its computer maintenance policy

Sir, The report "ICL Refusing Data Access to Independents' published in The Times of November 4, relates a number of suggestions to the effect that my company, International Computers Limited, unduly restricts the freedom of customers to have their computers maintained by independent maintenance companies, and unreasonably refuses support, access to diagnostics, and spare parts to such companies and to cus-tomers who wish to turn to them. The facts are as follows.

ICL recognizes the right of owners of computing equipment (though not, of course, hirers) to choose whether the manufacturer, an independent com-pany, should maintain their equipment; or indeed to choose to maintain their equipment hemselves. ICL has made heavy investments in order to make avail-able to its hire in Britain, on the Continent and overseas, and to all purchasers who choose ICL maintenance, a comprehen-sive maintenance service designed to ensure that customers have maximum use of their equipment at a competitive charge. To ensure that this is possible, ICL has set up an extensive maintenance network, has invested heavily in spaces and engineering training and has developed advanced fault-finding and diagnostic tech-niques in order to reduce main-

ance facilities give ICL a com-petitive edge, and sees no good reason why its facilities should be released to organizations which are not prepared to make comparable investments them-selves. # Call for the politics of generosity, not greed

From Mr C. Owen Sir, As a people we have few problems that could not be solved by effective organization. There are two prerequisites: agreed and reasonably ambitious objectives and impressive management

It would help if, as a change from the politics of envy of much of the past decade, we could now have a period of the politics of generosity. A lead from the top would meet with a response, and in time perhaps a habit of cooperation, in all decision-making areas. Even industry might be induced to heal its wounds.

Philips simply says it is interested in increasing its stake in ER, partly because it admires its ability to make good money in the television rental business—nearly £11m last year. With Philips through its Mullard business the only maker of colour television tubes left in Britain, one begins to understand why it is anxious to hold a powerful position

Swan Hunter

Cash to come

Swan Hunter's annual report contains a package of cash handouts, and a new company on top of the still unknown quantity of nationalization compensation.

It is clear that this was better than most observers had been expecting. Even without the compensation proceeds there should be £1 per share cash in the company. Another 40p can be added to this to cover the estimated value of the new company's shares, assuming first that the cash does not go into the new company and second asset backing of around £7m, for the new com-pany. Then, of course, there is the lowest estimate of compensation which is £5m or

That adds up to an apparent base line price for the shares of 167p against yesterday's closing price of 157p, a discount that includes market confusion and uncertainty about the details of the director's intensions.

Part of this confusion revolves around the precise amount of the cash handout. The minimum is put by the company at 50p and analysts have been suggesting up to 150p and beyond assuming the board decides to hand out every penny.

The possible outcome is that some one may see Swan Hunter as a suitable acquisition, an operation that could be seen as an alternative to a rights issue.

For the time being all these pointers seem be good for the shares, but the uncertainty created by nationalization is such that shareholders should recognize the highly speculative nature of their investment at

• Investors in gilts have, for a change, had little to complain of over the past 12 months in terms of getting a real rate of return on their investment.

Yesterday's Wholesale Price Index for October showed that price levels are continuing to move in the right direction and the Government has already stated that it hopes—albeit after as many false starts as we care to remember—that the year on year rise in prices should be down to single figures within six months or so.

RPI PROJECTIONS Change over 12 months on the basis of the following monthly rates of increase from September

Ornyalda.	0.5%	0.75%	1%

Marchi	8.5	10.4	12.1
June	4.9	8.2	10.6
Sept	6.2	9.4	12.7

The problem, of course, comes in judging what happens once the factors already at work in the cause of slower rising prices have worked themselves through the system. And here the most obvious uncertainty, as we have been rudely reminded those past few days, is the future course of pay settlements. As the chart shows, even assuming a fairly constant monthly increase in price levels, the year on year rate of increase could well have bottomed out within six to nine months. And, though a rise in earnings in the present wage round above the Govern-ment's 10 per cent target would take some further months to have an effect on the rate of price increases, the financial markets would adjust their stance a good time ahead

North Sea oil and the economy-2

The classic scene in the silent comedies has the hero hammering unsuccessfully at the door; he rurns round and walks off in disgust whereupon the whole building collapses behind him.

The debate about the exchange rate has been overtaken by events and the Government has been forced to change its intervention policy. What is there left to say except perhaps: "We told you

But these articles are after all, about North Sea oil. The massive inflows of funds which massive inflows of funds which eventually forced the freeing of the exchange rate had little to do with North Sea oil (which has been known about for a long time) and a great deal to do with the change in confidence following the International Monetary Fund Letter of Intent and the Government's commitment to stringent financial policy. Having gent financial policy, Having willed the means it was bound eventually to will the end in terms of a higher exchange rate and lower prices.

There are still issues to be debated about exchange rate and monetary policy in connexion with North Sea oil and it is right to air them, since there is still a chance that, once it has coped with what it sees as a temporary problem, the Government will revert to exchange rate "management".

It is important to dist. It is important to dist-

Adjustment of output

One approach to the long-run problem would go as fol-lows: North Sea oil is a gift of nature which reises the poten-tial output of the United King-dom. (We need not worty for the moment how the gift is to be shared out.) Output will adjust to this higher level and since there will be higher out-put we shall need larger real money basiness to finance it. We can achieve the increase

We can achieve the increase in real balances by increasing the nominal amount of money while holding prices constant or by holding nominel balances constant and allowing prices to fail. Normally one would choose the former course since it is rather difficult (though it is by no means unheard of) to make prices fall. But since we live in a world of chronic inflation, there is something to be said for adopting the latter course and using the increase in output to slow inflation down.

If North Sea oil raises potential output at current prices by about 4 per cent, it would eventually, with a given growth in the money supply, keep prices roughly 4 per cant lower than they would other-wise have been—and every

That may sound rather an odd approach to the problem.
The great debate on North Sea oil has been about its effect on the balance of payments and thence on the money supply. Bur one can argue as follows: in the long run North Sea oil even it if lested for ever, will have no effect on the balance of payments.

That may sound both unhelpful and uninteresting, but the obsession with the balance the obsession with the balance of payments effects of North Sea oil has undoubtedly been a major source of confusion. The trouble began when oil prices increased in 1973. People started talking about "oil" and "non-oil" balance of payments deficits, as if oil effects could me some nurrouse be could to some purpose be added to or subtracted from the balance of payments.
We now have the same delusion in reverse, with people wanting to take North Sea oil our of the balance of payments only be transitory.

The adjustment in the balance of payment, whether exchange rates are fixed or flexible, will come about through four mechanisms. First, part of the proceeds of North Sea oil will be spent on imports. Secondly, to the extent that there is swy increase in economic activity, there will be an increase in imports. Thirdly, there will be capital outflows and, fourthly, there will be changes in the structure of the economy to

Since these processes will all the time, the shore-run effects

If the exchange rate is held constant, there will be inflows of reserves with consequential effects on the money supply and prices. If the exchange rate is freed, it is likely to rise, while leaving domestic prices unchanged.

In either case we shall experience, at least in the short run, an increase in the real exchange rate. Whether that increase will be sustained it is extremely difficult to tell. It seems likely that it will be and this, indeed, will be part of the mechanism by which resources are shifted from foreign to domestic markets.

However, as the economy

The only difference in the end will be that prices and the nominal money supply will be higher and the exchange rate will be lower in the fixed rate an accounting exercise, calcula-tion of the effects of oil may have some interest (we have done such calculations our-selves); it may also be in-teresting to ask how oil affects the economy, but it is compe-tely misleading to continue to treat oil (wherever it comes from) separately, as if we had two separate balance of paycase than it, the flexible rate case. Again, it would seem better to use the increase in the exchange rate as a further method of bringing inflation down. The increase in oil prices was a major shock to the system and the arrival of North Sea oil is a major shock to the system, too. The first had a marked short-run effect on the current account of the balance of psyments, pushing it into deficit, and the second will have the short-run effect of pushing it into marplus; but there is

A classic choice

Inevitably, all the attention has been concentrated on the short-run period during which the adjustment to North Sea oil will be incomplete. Those who have argued for a fixed exchange rate (or for "concentrate conventionness") home to spent competiveness") hope to avoid the increase in the real exchange rate which they believe North Sea oil will generate. But they almost cer-tainly do nor have the choics.

The increase in the real exchange rate will come about either through an increase in the exchange rate with prices unchanged or through an increase in prices with the exchange rate unchanged. If the suthorities try to preexchange rate change, prices will adjust through reserve in-Exchange rate change, prices oil dries up.

loss of control of the money

While the general outlines of monetary policy may be easily described, the details will call described, the details will call for all the skills of the authorities; but in the end monetary policy will simply provide the framework within which the important and interesting questions of allocating the benefits of North Sea oil are decided.

Those questions are political and the economist per se has no particular contribution to make. He can, however, sound a warning when it looks as if the political discussion is ignoring or misrepresenting the economic constraints.

One proposal is to ensure that the exchange rate is kept low, and possibly reduced further, in order to maintain our export industry while North as I have argued, is that we shall have higher prices. But, even if it could be achieved, it would mean that we per-manently keep the terms of trade lower than they need be In order to maintain sections of industry ready for some distant date (which no one knows, not even the Govern-ment) when they will once again be needed. It may be that we cannot rely on industry to solve this difficult "re-entry" prob-lem unaided; but it is in industry's direct interest to try to get it right. One thing we can be fairly sure of is that the mix of exports we shall need in twenty or so years' time is not the mix we have

Whatever happened, there would have to be major structural changes. There is an imsidy to exports through an artificially low exchange rate would prevent these structural changes, with constant demands for a yet lower exchange rate as industries became threatened. All this intervention will be predicated upon the belief that the Government knows both what the required level of competiiveness is and how to achieve

Finally, there is the question of unemployment. On this I am less optimistic than most. I can see no reason to expect that North Sea oil by itself will allow us to reduce the level of unemployment permanently.

Windfall reserves

If our present problems are ones of adjustment for the United Kingdom and the rest of the world, in the sense that there is a lower level of unemployment which will avoid accelerating inflation or chronic behance of payments and the poly problems and the poly problem. problems and the only problem is to reach it, then North Sea oil may help the process. The short-run belance of payments surpluses are like a windfall increase in the foreign exchange reserves which will sallow us to run the economy temporarily at a higher pres-sure of demand than would otherwise by the case. But this merely speeds the journey, it does not alter the destination.

The Government could, of course, use the additional resources while they last to subsidize employment, but that is a political choice involving a shift of resources from the employed to the currently unemployed. The additional resources from North Sea oil make the decider entire his make the decision easier, but do not alter its basic nature.

Hoechst set to meet Leftist threat

Given the possibility of a victory for the Left, whether united or not, in the forthcoming French elections. what is the attitude of the Hoechst group to the concomitant possibility of nationalization of its major pharmaceutical subsidiary?

Nationalization is not acceptable to us. We intend to use all possible legal channels to protect our shareholders. Even if nationalization in France could not be avoided, the courts of law in other countries could prevent nationalization of located within their own boundaries and, at all events, lay down acceptable standards of compensation.

9re you referring in particular to the International Court of Justice in The Hague?

Not exclusively. There are also the European laws and the national courts of states where Roussel-Uclaf assets are situated. There is case law dating back to the Russian revolution, Algerian nationalization, and

These laws are mainly concerned with protecting foreign subsidiaries. Would you not contest the nationalization of the French assets?

Quite. But France has an international obligation to abide by the Declaration of Human Rights, which refers to problems of nationalization and compensation.

Do you completely rule out the possibility of cooperation with a nationalized Roussel-Uclaf, assuming that a number of the members of the current management team of your subsidiary remain at its head?

Allow me to point out that we do not regard Roussel-Uclaf as a subsidiary of Hoechst. It is an affiliate, a partner, and the fact that we hold more than 50 per cent of the shares in this company makes no difference.

Would this prevent you from cooperating?

We would have to look at the situation in the light of the arrangements and the personalities involved. It would depend on the people put into the management structures at Roussel-Uclaf, on whether the super-visory board in its present form retained its powers, on the composition of the supervisory board etc. Given a willingness to cooperate on all sides, it could be in our best interests. But first of all we have an obligation to protect our shareholders' legal and financial rights. Compensation is very important in your view, then?

It is of prime importance to our shareholders. On the other hand, as a businessman, I wonder whether it would be possible to continue cooperation on the lines along which it has been developed over the last eight years.

In the meantime, have you taken pre-emptive action? There is much talk in France about companies liable to nationalization hiving off large quantities of assets to foreign subsidiaries.

It may be madness on our part, but we have not done this. I have always taken the view that, in difficult circumstances, the best course is to act as if nothing is going to happen. In Roussel-Uclaf, just as in Hoechst France, we have maintained. the investment programme at the level planned, and indeed more than this, since Roussel-Uclaf's current investment budget is the biggest it has ever had in its history. I consider it is wrong to do anything which could be interpreted as protective or evasive action.

There is talk of a merger between Chimio SA, which controls Roussel-Uclaf, and Hoechst France. Is this not designed to forestall the possibility of nationalization?

No. It is simply a rationalization measure, Chimio is and will continue to be wholly owned by Hoechst. The Roussel-Uclaf holding will remain unchanged.

Does Roussel-Uclaf launch its new products itself, or jointly with Hoechst, or on some other basis?

> Research contracts determine the basis on which products are launched. At the beginning of our association we defined the fields for joint and separate research. Consequently, a product belonging to one of Roussel-Uclaf's specific research fields is launched by Roussel-Uclaf alone. There is, however, an exception to this: in some countries, such as the United States, we have a subsidiary which launches our products jointly; this is more economical and efficient.

As a group manager, have you resisted the temptation to devitalize Roussel-Uclaf's research?

Roussel-Uclaf's research is dynamic enough for us to have felt no such temptation. This is not to say that the situation could not arise, even without any action on our part, since research is international and researchers are free to go where

Would it be possible to separate the research efforts of Roussel-Uclaf and Hoechst, which now overlap to a great extent?

It would be a difficult, tricky and somewhat dangerous process. It takes six to 10 years to develop a product. We are currently working on the products of the mid-1980s. What is more, it would be a great shame. Today, however big it may be, a pharmaceutical concern caucoc do everything at once. It has to make choices. For instance Rousselmake choices. For instance Roussel-Uclaf carries out a great dead of research on steroids, but is weak in the cardio-vascular field. Roussel has there-fore signed en agreement with Hoschst under which, when its steroids researchers find a new product, they immediately try to come up with a derivative, a substitute, which can be passed on to Hoechst, and Hoechst reciprocates in the cardio-vascular field. If this relationship were to end, Roussel's cardio-vascular field would

Would it perhaps be possible to opt for steriods alone—wholly French products?

At the moment our steriods are wholly French, except in the United States where the size of the market obliges us, both Hoechst and Roussel-Uclaf, to market everything together. The French company has complete control over its

So, if each partner in the marriage has, so to speak retained personal property rights, a divorce would be that much easier to arrange?

Theoretically yes. However, we are not concerned with the past, but the future. This year we have had the first instance of a steriod being marketed in the United States under a French name. The point is that, for all its brilliant research, Roussel does not always have the commercial and financial weight to attack interestional markets success. attack international markets success fully in the face of world competition The Hoechst group's turnover is 10 times as large as Roussel-Uclaf's. The power ratio is clear. If it is true that Roussel-Uclaf contributes certain things to Hoechst, the converse is equally true. We should be seeing something similar in Europe

Is there not, a danger that, in the event of nationalization, you would have to pay the price of the great loyalty to to pay the price of the great loyalty to your French partners you have displayed in adopting the genuine view of your mutual interests, by which I mean encouraging their own dynamism in order to benefit from it? You could have taken the other course and attracted the researchers to West Germany while breaking up the company.

Of course we could have, but we would have destroyed the company instead of building it up.

Do you have channels through which to bring pressure to bear in France? No, none. We have to use persuasion.

Have you been in contact with the parties of the left to give them a better understanding of the situation?

The French management of Rousse Uclaf have supplied the available documents to those who have asked for them. But they do not yet know the group well end we have seen documents which contained major errors. The role which contained major errors. The role of the Roussel-Ucisi board of manageof the Roussel-Ucial board of manage-ment is to improve information on the group, but it is not appropriate for its French members to take up political positions by arguing constantly with politicians, since they will be respon-sible for the future running of the company whatever happens. Seen from the Roechst viewpoint the situation is different: we have not only the right-but the duty to take up political positions. FINANCIAL NEWS

The Times Awards for the best advertisement of a company's results have aroused considerable interest since their introduction in 1974 and the competition is now in its fourth year. The categories in which awards will be made are listed alongside. The conditions of entry remain unchanged.

THE TIMES AWARDS FOR THE BEST ADVERTISEMENT OF A COMPANY'S RESULTS FOR 1977.

The Awards

The awards will follow the 1976 pattern, namely a) The Grand Prix, to be held for one year, awarded to the entrant whose advertisement is, in the opinion of the judges, the best submitted, irrespective of category. The Grand Prix consists of a silver trophy, specially designed for The Times by Gordon Hodgson. b) First, second and third prizes for category winners. Awards will be made both to the winning advertiser and agent.

The Panel of Judges

The Awards will be made by an independent panel of judges, selected for their understanding of this specialised form of communication.

They will judge entries in accordance with the following criteria. An advertisement of a company's results, whether the Chairman's statement is or is not included in full or in abridged form, should:

a) Attract the eye, by virtue of its design. b) Be easy to read, by the use of skilful typography.

c) Contain such information as prospective investors or professional advisers are likely to require, including details of the business carried on by the company.

d) Include at the option of the advertiser, such illustrations, graphs, or diagrams as may be necessary to supplement (c) above.

e) Leave the reader with the impression that the company concerned would be a good one to do business with, to work for, or to invest in.

Note: In the case of the categories Interim Results or Preliminary Figures, only criteria (a) to (d) will apply.

Conditions of Entry

All entries are free, but must have appeared in the pages of The Times Business News during 1977.

The following are the categories in which awards will be made:

1. Annual Results.

or equivalent

a) Colour or Black and White. Half page or larger, or equivalent b) Colour or Black and White. Less than half page

2. Interim Results of Preliminary Figures.

Colour or Black and White (All sizes).

The Judges will have the option of making at their absolute discretion, special awards for the following: *The best advertisement by an overseas company.

*The best advertisement smaller than 20cms x 4 cols. *The advertisement which makes the most significant contribution to new and imaginative thinking in financial advertising (without necessarily satisfying all the criteria for the Grand Prix or Category Winners.) Entries will be accepted throughout the twelve month period January 1st-December 31st 1977, and should take the form of art pulls mounted on board, with a clear indication of the category in which they are to be judged. Six unmounted art pulls should also be provided for the use of the Award Judges. They should be sent to:

Half year results confirm overseas growth

Interim Statement

The Directors of Capper-Neill Limited announce that the profit for the first half of the current year to 31st March 1978 has exceeded that earned during the corresponding period of last year. This profit was a result of increased sales achieved by the expansion of the Group's activities.

The unaudited results for the first half of the financial year ending 31st March 1978 are

The Directors have declared an Interim Dividend of 1.0541p per share which, together with the associated tax credit is equivalent to approximately 1.5971p gross. This represents an effective increase of 10% on the Gross Dividend declared at the same time last year, which after adjusting for the subsequent scrip issue amounted to 1.452p. On the same basis the total gross dividends for the year ended 31st March 1977 amounted to 2.904p.

In addition, the balance of the Final Dividend for last year, which arises as a result of the change in the basic rate of Income Tax to 34% will be paid and will amount to 0.0145p per share. Improved results for the first half of this year have been achieved due to much increased activity in overseas markets which are continuing to expand. During this first half year however, the anticipated upsurge in United Kingdom economic activity failed to materialise and this led to a rather disappointing result in this area.

Present indications are that this may well continue for the remainder of the year. Our major activity remains in site construction work throughout an increasing range of processes which cover a widening spread of industries and markets and growth is expected to continue. Although the impact on profits of our much increased order book is unlikely to be effective before the year end, the Group performance for the full year to 31st March 1978 is expected to produce a profit somewhat in excess of the £4.2m profit figure which was achieved during the year ended 31st March 1977.

The Directors are therefore expecting to recommend a final dividend at the maximum rate permitted under current legislation.

Warrants incorporating both dividends will be posted on 4th January 1978 to shareholders registered at the close of business on the 25th November 1977.

Discount market

Factors against the market were principally randown balances brought across the weekend by the banks and a Treasury bill take-up that proved quite large. This combination was only partially offset by Exchequer disbursements that exceeded the tax limits.

Bill dealers spoke of rather less activity in Treasury bills, where the rate for the three-month maturity softened just 1/64 to 4 31/64-29/64 per cent. Money Market Rates
